And to the centre keep the parts confin'd. Blackmore.

To CONSTRUE. v. a. [construo, Lat.]

1. To range words in their natural order; to disentangle transposition.

I'll teach mine eyes, with meek humility,
Love-learned letters to her eyes to read;
Which her deep wit, that true heart's thought can spell,
Will soon conceive, and learn to construe well. Spenser.

Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say, indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries. Shaks.

2. To interpret; to explain; to show the meaning.

I must crave that I be not so understood or construed, as if any such thing, by virtue thereof, could be done without the aid and assistance of God's most blessed spirit. Hooker.

Virgil is so very figurative, that he requires, (I may almost say) a grammar apart to construe him. Dryden.

Thus we are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves either from the ignorance or malice of our adversaries. Stillingsfleet.

When the word is construed into its idea, the double meaning vanishes. Addison.

To CONSTUPRATE. v. a. [constupro, Lat.] To violate; to debauch; to defile.

CONSTUPRATION. n. f. [from constuprate.] Violation; defilement.

CONSUBSTANTIAL. adj. [consustantialis, Lat.]

1. Having the same essence or subsistence.

The Lord our God is but one God: in which indivisible unity, notwithstanding we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself, we glorify that consustantial Word, which is the Son; we bless and magnify that co-essential Spirit, eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

nally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

2. Being of the same kind or nature.

It continueth a body consustantial with our bodies; a body of the same, both nature and measure, which it had on earth. Hooker.

In their conceits the human nature of Christ was not consustantial to ours, but of another kind. Brerewood.

CONSUBSTANTIALITY. n. f. [from consustantial.]

CONTABULATION. n. f. [contabulatio, Latin.] A joining of boards together; a boarding a floor.

CONTACT. n. f. [contactus, Latin.] Touch; close union; juncture of one body to another.

The Platonists hold, that the spirit of the lover doth pass into the spirits of the person loved, which causeth the desire of return into the body; whereupon followeth that appetite of contact and conjunction. Bacon's Natural History.

When the light fell so obliquely on the air, which in other places was between them, as to be all reflected, it seemed in that place of contact to be wholly transmitted. Newton's Opticks.

The air, by its immediate contact, may coagulate the blood which flows along the air-bladders. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CONTACTION. n. f. [contactus, Latin.]

The act of touching; a joining one body to another.

That deleterious it may be at some distance, and destructive without corporal contaction, there is no high improbability. Brown.

CONTAGION. n. f. [contagio, Latin.]

1. The emission from body to body by which diseases are communicated.

If we two be one, and thou play false, I do digest the poison of thy flesh, Being strumpeted by thy contagion. Shakspeare.

In infection and contagion from body to body, as the plague and the like, the infection is received many times by the body passive; but yet is, by the strength and good disposition thereof, repulsed. Bacon.

2. Infection; propagation of mischief, or disease.

Nor will the goodness of intention excuse the scandal and contagion of example. King Charles.
Down fell they,

And the dire hiss renew'd, and the dire form Catch'd by contagion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Pestilence; venomous emanations.

Will he steal out of his wholesome bed, To dare the vile contagion of the night? Shaks.

CONTAGIOUS. adj. [from contagio, Latin.]

Infectious; caught by approach; poisonous; pestilential.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night
From their misty jaws
Breathe foul, contagious darkness in the air.

We sicken soon from her contagious care,
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

CONTAGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contagious.]

The quality of being contagious.

TO CONTAIN. v. a. [contineo, Latin.]

1. To hold as a vessel.

There are many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one,

I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John.

Gently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain. Milton.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance. Milton.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.

What seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd. Milton.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

3. To comprise, as a writing.

Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture. 1 Peter.

4. To restrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terrour of warlike forces. Spenser on Ireland.

Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions. Spenser.

I tell you, firs,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves. Shakespeare.

To CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, till I could no longer contain. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air, containable within the cavity of the colipile, amounted to eleven grains. Boyle.

To CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contamino, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shaks.
A base pander holds the chamber-door,
Whilst by a slave, no gentler than a dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakspeare.
Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,
Even in the bed she hath contaminated. Shaks.

I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spill of thine. Shaks.
Though it be necessitated, by its relation to flesh, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis, like the sun, without contaminating its beams. Glanv.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTAMINATION. n. f. [from contaminate.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTEMERATED. adj. [contemeratus, Latin.] Violated; polluted. Di.

To CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still contemned and flattered. Shakspeare.
Eve, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
To argue in thee something more sublime
And excellent than what thy mind contemns. Milton.

Pygmalion then the Tyrian sceptre sway'd,
One who contemn'd divine and human laws;
Then strife ensued. Dryden's Virg. Æneid.

CONTEMNER. n. f. [from contemn.] One that contemns; a despiser; a scorner.

He counsels him to prosecute innovators of worship, not only as contemners of the gods, but disturbers of the state. South.

To CONTEMPER. v. a. [contempero,

Latin.] To moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves qualify and temper the heat, and hinder the evaporation of moisture. Ray.

CONTEMPERAMENT. n. f. [from contempero, Lat.] The degree of any quality as tempered to others.

There is nearly an equal temperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere. Derham.

To CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [from contemper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air, but refresh and humec-tate the earth. Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and temperating the humours. Wiseman's Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. f. [from contemperate.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the temperament of fervour in the heart. Brown.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the temperaments of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies. Hale.

To CONTEMPLATE. v. a. [contemplor, Lat. This seems to have been once accented on the first syllable.] To consider with continued attention; to study; to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

CONTEMPLATE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate. Shakspeare.
Sapor had an heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contemplating over the same as if he had been Jupiter. Peacham.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you? Dryden's Juvenal, Preface.

CONTEMPLATION. n. f. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now? what serious contemplation are you in? Shakspeare.
Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view. Locke.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breath'd a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here. Shakspeare.

3. The faculty of study: opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculation, others employ our actions. South.

CONTEMPLATIVE. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

Fixt and contemplative their looks,
Still turning over nature's books. Denham.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs:
my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Contemplative men may be without the pleasure of discovering the secrets of state, and men of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art. Grew.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to exercise the contemplative faculty of man. Ray.

CONTEMPLATIVELY. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

CONTEMPLATOR. n. f. [Lat.] One employed in study; an inquirer after knowledge; a student.

In the Persian tongue the word magus imports as much as a contemplator of divine and heavenly science. Raleigh's History.

The Platonick contemplators reject both these descriptions, founded upon parts and colours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPORARY. adj. [contemporain, Fr.]

1. Living in the same age; coetaneous.

Albert Durer was contemporary to Lucas. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Born at the same time.

A grove born with himself he sees,
And loves his old contemporary trees. Cowley.

3. Existing at the same point of time.

It is impossible to make the ideas of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow, to be the same; or bring ages past and future together, and make them contemporary. Locke.

CONTEMPORARY. n. f. One who lives at the same time with another.

All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd;
Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd. Dryd.
As he has been favourable to me, he will hear of his kindness from our contemporaries; for we are fallen into an age illiterate, censorious, and detracting. Dryden's Juvenal, Preface.

The active part of mankind, as they do most for the good of their contemporaries, very deservedly gain the greatest share in their applauses. Addison's Freeholder.

To CONTEMPORISE. v. a. [con and tempus, Latin.] To make contemporary; to place in the same age.

The indifferency of their existences, contemporised into our actions, admits a farther consideration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPT. n. f. [contemptus, Lat.]

1. The act of despising others; slight regard; scorn.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Eslier.

The shame of being miserable,
Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,
Even from their nearest friends. Denham.

There is no action, in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
Nothing, says Longinus, can be great, the contempt of which is great. Addison.

2. The state of being despised; vileness.

The place was like to come unto contempt. 2 Mac.

CONTEMPTIBLE. adj. [from contempt.]

1. Worthy of contempt; deserving scorn.

No man truly knows himself, but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes. Taylor.

- From no one vice exempt,
And most contemptible to shun contempt. Pope.
2. Despised; scorned; neglected.
There is not so contemptible a plant or animal, that does not confound the most enlarged understanding. Locke.
3. Scornful; apt to despise; contemptuous. This is no proper use.
If she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man hath a contemptible spirit. Shakspeare.
- CONTEMPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from contemptible.] The state of being contemptible; the state of being despised; meannefs; vileness; baseness; cheapness.
Who, by a steady practice of virtue, comes to discern the contemptibleness of baits wherewith he allures us. Decay of Piety.
- CONTEMPTIBLY. adv. [from contemptible.] Meanly; in a manner deserving contempt.
Know'st thou not
Their language, and their ways? They also know,
And reason not contemptibly. Milton.
- CONTEMPTUOUS. adj. [from contempt.]
Scornful; apt to despise; using words or actions of contempt; insolent.
To neglect God all our lives, and know that we neglect him; to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, casting our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at parting, is no other than a rebellious presumption, and even a contemptuous laughing to scorn and deriding of God, his laws, and precepts. Raleigh.
Some much averse I found, and wond'rous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite.
Milt. Agon.
- Rome, the proudest part of the heathen world, entertained the most contemptuous opinion of the Jews. Atterbury.
- CONTEMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from contemptuous.] With scorn; with despite;
scornfully; despitefully.
I throw my name against the bruising stone,
Trampling contemptuously on thy diadem. Shaks.
The apostles and most eminent christians were poor, and used contemptuously. Taylor.
If he governs tyrannically in youth, he will be treated contemptuously in age; and the baser his enemies, the more intolerable the affront.
L'Estrange.
- A wise man would not speak contemptuously of a prince, though out of his dominions. Tillotson.
- CONTEMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from contemptuous.] Disposition to contempt;
insolence. Dist.
- To CONTE'ND. v. n. [contendo, Lat.]
1. To strive; to struggle in opposition.
Hector's forehead spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakspeare.
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakspeare.
Death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land. Deut.
  2. To vie; to act in emulation.
You sit above, and see vain men below Contend for what you only can bestow. Dryden.
  3. It has for before the ground or cause of contention.
The question which our author would contend for, if he did not forget it, is, what persons have a right to be obeyed. Locke.
  4. Sometimes about.
He will find that many things he fiercely contended about were trivial. Decay of Piety.
  5. It has with before the opponent.
- VOL. I.

- This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.
- If we consider him as our Maker, we cannot contend with him. Temple.
6. Sometimes against.
In ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakspeare.
- To CONTE'ND. v. a. To dispute any thing; to contest.
Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
And on the green contend the wrestler's prize.
Dryden's Æneid.
- A time of war at length will come,
When Carthage shall contend the world with Rome. Dryden.
- Thus low we lie,
Shut from this day and that contended sky. Dryd.
- CONTE'NDENT. n. f. [from contend.] Antagonist; opponent; champion; combatant. Not used.
In all notable changes and revolutions, the contentents have been still made a prey to the third party. L'Estrange.
- CONTE'NDER. n. f. [from contend.] Combatant; champion.
The contenders for it look upon it as undeniable. Locke.
- Those disputes often arise in good earnest, where the two contenders do really believe the different propositions which they support. Watts.
- CONTENT. adj. [contentus, Lat.]
1. Satisfied, so as not to repine; easy, though not highly pleased.
Born to the spacious empire of the Nine,
One would have thought she should have been content
To manage well that mighty government. Dryd.
Who is content, is happy. Locke.
A man is perfectly content with the state he is in, when he is perfectly without any uneasiness. Locke.
  2. Satisfied, so as not to oppose.
Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,
Content with science in the vale of peace. Pope.
  3. Satisfied, so as not to oppose.
Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shakspeare.
- To CONTE'NT. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To satisfy, so as to stop complaint; not to offend; to appease, without plenary happiness or complete gratification.
Content thyself with this much, and let this satisfy thee, that I love thee. Sidney.
Great minds do sometimes content themselves to threaten, when they could destroy. Tillotson.
Do not content yourselves with obscure and confused ideas where clearer are to be attained.
Watts' Logick.
  2. To please; to gratify.
Is the adder better than the eel
Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shaks.
It doth much content me,
To hear him so inclin'd. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the musick of praise will be fuller. Bacon.
Wheat is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Curew.
- CONTE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.
Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shaks.
One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;
This every little accident destroy'd. Dryden.
A wife content his even soul secur'd;
By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd.
Smith on Philips.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for drest:
Their praise is still—the stile is excellent;
The sense they humbly take upon content. Pope.
3. [from contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included, in any thing.
Though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Shakspeare.
- Scarcely any thing can be determined of the particular contents of any single mass of ore by mere inspection. Woodward.
- Experiments are made on the blood of healthy animals: in a weak habit serum might afford other contents. Arbuthnot.
4. The power of containing; extent; capacity.
This island had then fifteen hundred strong ships of great content. Bacon.
It were good to know the geometrical content,
dom, according to natural bounds. Graunt.
5. That which is comprised in a writing.
In this sense the plural only is in use.
I have a letter from her,
Of such contents as you will wonder at. Shakspeare.
- I shall prove these writings not counterfeits, but authentick; and the contents true, and worthy of a divine original. Grew's Cosmologia.
- The contents of both books come before those of the first book, in the thread of the story. Addison's Spectator.
- CONTENTA'TION. n. f. [from content.]
Satisfaction; content. Out of use.
I seek no better warrant than my own conscience, nor no greater pleasure than mine own contentation. Sidney.
- Fourteen years space, during the minority of Gordianus, the government was with great applause and contentation in the hands of Mithreus, a pedant. Bacon.
- The shield was not long after incrusted with a new rust, and is the same, a cut of which hath been engraved and exhibited, to the great contentation of the learned. Arbuthnot and Pope.
- CONTE'NTED. participial adj. [from content.] Satisfied; at quiet; not repin-ing; not demanding more; easy, though not plenary happy.
Barbarossa, in hope by sufferance to obtain another kingdom, seemed contented with the answer. Knolles' History.
- Dream not of other worlds,
Contented that thus far has been reveal'd,
Not of earth only, but of highest heav'n.
Milton's Par. Lost.
- If he can descry
Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,
And begs his fate, and then contented falls. Denham.
- To distant lands Vertumnus never roves,
Like you contented with his native groves. Pope.
- CONTE'NTEDNESS. n. f. [from contented.]
State of satisfaction in any lot.
Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a pre-curer of contentedness. Walton's Angler.
- CONTE'NTION. n. f. [contentio, Lat.]
1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.
Can we with manners ask what was the difference?
—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention in publick. Shakspeare.
Avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings. Titus.
Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their ease, their reason, and their

God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom? Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that reigned in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention. Shaks.

3. Eagerness; zeal; ardour; vehemence of endeavour.

Your own earnestness and contention to effect what you are about, will continually suggest to you several artifices. Holder.

This is an end, which at first view appears worthy our utmost contention to obtain. Rogers.

CONTENTIOUS. adj. [from contend.] Quarrellous; given to debate; perverse; not peaceable.

Thou thinkest much that this contentious storm invades us to the skin. Shakspeare's King Lear.

There are certain contentious humours that are never to be pleased. L'Estrange.

Rest made them idle, idleness made them curious, and curiosity contentious. Decay of Piety.

CONTENTIOUS Jurisdiction. [In law.]

A court which has a power to judge and determine differences between contending parties. The lord chief justices, and judges, have a contentious jurisdiction; but the lords of the treasury, and the commissioners of the customs, have none, being merely judges of accounts and transactions. Chambers.

CONTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from contentious.] Perversely; quarrellously.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, or only to justify our own, but to applaud and confirm his maturer assertions. Brown.

CONTENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contentious.] Proneness to contest; perverseness; turbulence; quarrellousness.

Do not contentiousness, and cruelty, and study of revenge, seldom fail of retaliation? Bentley.

CONTENTLESS. adj. [from content.] Discontented; dissatisfied; uneasy.

Best states, contentless,

Have a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst, content. Shakspeare.

CONTENTMENT. n. f. [from content, the verb.]

1. Acquiescence, without plenary satisfaction.

Such men's contentment must be wrought by stratagem: the usual method of fare is not for them. Hooker.

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortunes. Temple.

Contentment, without external honour, is humility; without the pleasure of eating, temperance. Grew's Cosmologia.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease; Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope.

But now no face divine contentment wears, 'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. Gratification.

At Paris the prince spent one whole day, to give his mind some contentment in viewing of a famous city. Wotton.

CONTERMINOUS. adj. [from conterminus, Lat.]

Bordering upon; touching at the boundaries.

This conformed to many of them, as were conterminous to the colonies and garrisons, to the Roman laws. Hale.

CONTERRA'NEOUS. adj. [from conterraneus, Lat.] Of the same country. Diſt.

To CONTE'ST. v. a. [from contester, French, probably from contra testari, Lat.] To dispute; to controvert; to litigate; to call in question.

'Tis evident upon what account none have presumed to contest the proportion of these ancient pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To CONTE'ST. v. n.

1. To strive; to contend: followed by with.

The difficulty of an argument adds to the pleasure of contesting with it, when there are hopes of victory. Burnet.

2. To vie; to emulate.

I do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love, As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour. Shakspeare.

Pope's Odyssey.

CO'NTEST. n. f. [from the verb. It is now accented on the first syllable.] Dispute; difference; debate.

This of old no less contests did move, Than when for Homer's birth sev'n cities strove. Denham.

A definition is the only way whereby the meaning of words can be known, without leaving room for contest about it. Locke.

Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, and brawling language. Watts.

CONTE'STABLE. adj. [from contest.] That may be contested; disputable; controvertible.

CONTE'STABLENESS. n. f. [from contestable.] Possibility of contest. Diſt.

CONTESTA'TION. n. f. [from contest.] The act of contesting; debate; strife.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and, which was worse, divers contestations even with the queen herself. Watton.

After years spent in domestick, unsociable contestations, she found means to withdraw. Clarend.

To CONTE'X. v. a. [from contexto, Lat.] To weave together; to unite by interposition of parts. Not in use.

Nature may context a plant, though that be a perfectly mixt concrete, without having all the elements previously presented to her to compound it of. Boyle.

The fluid body of quicksilver is contexted with the salts it carries up in sublimation. Boyle.

CO'NTEXT. n. f. [from contextus, Latin.] The general series of a discourse; the parts of the discourse that precede and follow the sentence quoted.

That chapter is really a representation of one, which hath only the knowledge, not practice, of his duty; as is manifest from the context. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONTE'XT. adj. [from context.] Knit together; firm.

Hollow and thin, for lightness; but withal context and firm, for strength. Derham.

CONTE'XTURE. n. f. [from context.] The disposition of parts one among others; the composition of any thing out of separate parts; the system; the constitution; the manner in which any thing is woven or formed.

He was not of any delicate contexture; his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.

Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful contexture of created beings. Dryden.

Hence 'gan relax

The ground's contexture; hence Tartarian dregs,

Sulphur and nitrous spume, enkindling fierce, Bellow'd within their darksome caves. Philips.

This apt, this wise contexture of the sea, Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey; Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore. Blackmore.

CONTIGNA'TION. n. f. [from contignatio, Lat.]

1. A frame of beams joined together; a story.

We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in storied buildings. Wotton's Architecture.

Where more of the orders than one shall be set in several stories or contignations, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns one over another. Wotton.

2. The act of framing or joining a fabrick of wood.

CONTIGU'ITY. n. f. [from contiguous.] Actual contact; situation in which two bodies or countries touch upon each other.

He defined magnetical attraction to be a natural imitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity. Brown.

The immediate contiguity of that convex were a real space. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

CONTIGUOUS. adj. [from contiguus, Lat.]

1. Meeting so as to touch; bordering upon each other; not separate.

Flame doth not mingle with flame as air doth with air, or water with water, but only remaineth contiguous; as it cometh to pass betwixt consisting bodies. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The loud misrule

The east and west,

Upon the globe, a mathematic point Only divides: thus happiness and misery, And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham.

Distinguish them by the diminution of the lights and shadows, joining the contiguous objects by the participation of their colours. Dryd.

When I viewed it too near, the two halves of the paper did not appear fully divided from one another, but seemed contiguous at one of their angles. Newton's Opticks.

2. It has sometimes with.

Water, being contiguous with air, cooleth it, but moisteneth it not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CONTIGUOUSLY. adv. [from contiguous.]

Without any intervening spaces.

Thus disembroll'd, they take their proper place, The next of kin contiguously embrace, And foes are sunder'd by a larger space. Dryden.

CONTIGUOUSNESS. n. f. [from contiguous.] Close connexion; coherence. Diſt.

CO'NTINENCE. } n. f. [from continentia, Lat.]

CO'NTINENCY. }

1. Restraint; command of one's self.

He knew what to say; he knew also when to leave off, a continence which is practised by few writers. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

2. Chastity in general.

Where is he?—

—In her chamber, making a sermon of continency to her, and rails, and swears, and rates, Shaks.

Suffer not dishonour to approach

Th' imperial seat; to virtue consecrate,

To justice, continence, and nobility. Shaks.

3. Forbearance of lawful pleasure.

Content without lawful venery, is continence; without unlawful, chastity. Grew's Cosmol.

4. Moderation in lawful pleasures.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence, of married persons. Taylor.

5. Continuity; uninterrupted course.

Answers ought to be made before the same judge, before whom the depositions were produced, lest the continence of the course should be divided; or, in other terms, lest there should be a discontinuance of the cause. Ayliffe.

CONTINENT. adj. [continens, Lat.]

1. Chaste; abstemious in lawful pleasures.

Life

Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy. Shakspeare.

2. Restrained; moderate; temperate.

I pray you, have a continent forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakspeare.

3. Continuous; connected.

The north-east part of Asia, if not continent with the west side of America, yet certainly is the least disjoined by sea of all that coast of Asia. Brerewood on Languages.

4. Opposing; restraining.

My desire

All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspeare.

CONTINENT. n. f. [continens, Latin.]

1. Land not disjoined by the sea from other land.

Whether this portion of the world were rent
By the rude ocean from the continent,
Or thus created, it was sure design'd
To be the sacred refuge of mankind. Waller.

The declivity of rivers will be so much the less, and therefore the continents will be the less drained, and will gradually increase in humidity. Bentley's Sermons.

2. That which contains any thing. This sense is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

O cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent;
Crack thy frail case. Antony and Cleopatra.

Close pent-up guilts

Rive your contending continents. King Lear.

TO CONTINGE. v. n. [contingo, Lat.]

To touch; to reach; to happen. Dict.

CONTINGENCE. n. f. [from contingent.]

CONTINGENCY. n. f. The quality of being fortuitous; accidental possibility.

Their credulities assent unto any prognosticks, which, considering the contingency in events, are only in the presence of God. Brown.

For once, O heav'n! unfold thy adamantine book;

If not thy firm immutable decree,

At least the second page of great contingency,

Such as consists with wills originally free. Dryd.

Aristotle says, we are not to build certain rules upon the contingency of human actions.

South.

CONTINGENT. adj. [contingens, Latin.]

Falling out by chance; accidental; not determinable by any certain rule.

Hazard naturally implies in it, first, something future; secondly, something contingent. South.

I first informed myself in all material circumstances of it, in more places than one, that there might be nothing casual or contingent in any one of those circumstances. Woodward.

CONTINGENT. n. f.

1. A thing in the hands of chance.

By contingents we are to understand those things which come to pass without any human forecast. Grew's Cosmologia.

His understanding could almost pierce into future contingents, his conjectures improving even to prophecy. South's Sermons.

2. A proportion that falls to any person upon a division: thus, in time of war, each prince of Germany is to furnish his contingent of men, money, and munition.

CONTINGENTLY. adv. [from contingent.]

Accidentally; without any settled rule.

It is digged out of the earth contingently, and indifferently, as the pyritæ and agates. Woodw.

CONTINGENTNESS. n. f. [from contingent.]

Accidentalness; fortuitousness.

CONTINUAL. adj. [continuus, Latin.]

1. Incessant; proceeding without interruption; successive without any space of time between. Continual is used of time, and continuous of place.

He that is of a merry heart, hath a continual feast. Proverbs.

Other care perhaps

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbinder.

Milton.

'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. [In law.] A continual claim is made from time to time, within every year and day, to land or other thing, which,
in some respect, we cannot attain without danger. For example, if I be dis-seised of land, into which, though I have right into it, I dare not enter for fear of beating; it behooveth me to hold on my right of entry to the best opportunity of me and mine heir, by approaching as near it as I can, once every year as long as I live; and so I have the right of entry to my heir. Corwell.

3. It is sometimes used for perpetual.

CONTINUALLY. adv. [from continual.]

1. Without pause; without interruption.

The drawing of boughs into the inside of a room, where fire is continually kept, hath been tried with grapes. Bacon.

2. Without ceasing.

Why do not all animals continually increase in bigness, during the whole space of their lives?

Bentley's Sermons.

CONTINUANCE. n. f. [from continue.]

1. Succession uninterrupted.

The brute immediately regards his own preservation, or the continuance of his species.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Permanence in one state.

Continuance of evil doth in itself increase evil.

Sidney.

A chamber where a great fire is kept, though the fire be at one stay, yet with the continuance continually hath its heat increased. Sidney.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the con-sciences of men, by suggesting something which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, avowed continuance in sins. South.

3. Abode in a place.

4. Duration; lastingness.

You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Their duty depending upon fear, the one was of no greater continuance than the other. Hayw.

That pleasure is not of greater continuance, which arises from the prejudice and malice of its hearers. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Perseverance.

To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life. Romans.

6. Progression of time.

In thy book all my members were written,
which in continuance were fashioned. Psalms.

7. Resistance to separation of parts; continuity.

Wool, tow, cotton, and raw silk, have, besides the desire of continuance in regard to the tenuity of their thread, a greediness of moisture.

Bacon.

CONTINUE. adj. [continuatus, Lat.]

1. Immediately united.

We are of him and in him, even as though our very flesh and bones should be made *conti-

2. Uninterrupted; unbroken.

A most incomparable man, breath'd, as it were,

To an untirable and continue goodness. Shaksp.
A clear body broken to small pieces produceth white; and becometh most black while it is continue and undivided, as we see in deep waters and thick glasses. Peacham.

CONTINUATELY. adv. [from continue.]

With continuity; without interruption.

The water ascends gently, and by intermissions; but it falls continuate, and with force.

Wilkins.

CONTINUATION. n. f. [from continue.]

Protraction, or succession uninterrupted.

These things must needs be the works of Providence, for the continuation of the species, and upholding the world. Ray.

The Roman poem is but the second part of the Ilias; a continuation of the same story. Dryd.

CONTINUATIVE. n. f. [from continue.]

An expression noting permanence or duration.

To these may be added continuatives: as, Rome remains to this day; which includes at least two propositions, viz. Rome was, and Rome is. Watts's Logick.

CONTINUATOR. n. f. [from continue.]

He that continues or keeps up the series or succession.

It seems injurious to Providence to ordain a way of production which should destroy the producer, or contrive the continuation of the species by the destruction of the continuator. Brown.

TO CONTINUE. v. n. [continuer, Fr-
continuo, Latin.]

1. To remain in the same state, or place.

The multitude continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat. Matthew.

The popular vote

Inclines here to continue, and build up here

A growing empire.

Milton.

Happy, but for so happy ill secur'd,

Long to continue.

Milton.

He six days and nights

Continued making.

Milton.

2. To last; to be durable.

Thy kingdom shall not continue. 1 Samuel.

For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. Hebrews.

They imagine that an animal of the longest duration should live in a continued motion, without that rest whereby all others continue.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To persevere.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. John.

Down rush'd the rain

Impetuous, and continued till the earth
No more was seen.

Milton.

TO CONTINUE. v. a.

1. To protract, or hold without interruption.

O continue thy loving kindness unto them.

Psalms.

You know how to make yourself happy, by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead. Pope.

2. To unite without a chasm, or intervening substance.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments and sustenance. Brown.

The dark abyss, whose boiling gulph
Tarnely endur'd a bridge of wondrous length,
From hell continued, reaching th' utmost orb

Of this frail world. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Here Priam's son, Deiphobus, he found,
Whose face and limbs were one continued wound;
Dishonest, with lopp'd arms, the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden's Æneid.

Where any motion or succession is so slow, as that it keeps not pace with the ideas in our minds, there the series of a constant continued succession is lost; and we perceive it not but with certain gaps of rest between. Locke.

CONTINUEDLY. adv. [from continued.] Without interruption; without ceasing.

By perseverance, I do not understand a continued uniform, equal course of obedience, and such as is not interrupted with the least act of sin. Norris.

CONTRIVEMENT. n. f. [from contrive.] An invention. DiD.

CONTRIVER. n. f. [from contrive.] An inventer; one that plans a design; a schemer.

I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part. Shakspeare.

Epeus, who the fraud's contriver was. Denham.

Plain loyalty, not built on hope,
I leave to your contriver, Pope:
None loves his king and country better,
Yet none was ever less their debtor. Swift.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, encmy to mankind, must have been the first contriver.
Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CONTROL. n. f. [controlle, that is,
contre role, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may,
Without control, upon their fellows prey. Waller.

He shall feel a force upon himself from within,
and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily. South.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites, he is certainly too strong for the means of grace. South's Sermons.

Speak, what Phoebus has inspir'd thy soul
For common good, and speak without control.
Dryden's Homer.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controls.
Shakspeare.

To CONTROL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep under check by a counter reckoning.

2. To govern; to restrain; to subject.

Authority to convent, to control, to punish,
as far as with excommunication, whomsoever
they think worthy. Hooker.

Give me a staff of honour for mine age;
But not a sceptre to control the world. Shaks.

Who shall control me for my works? Ecclus.

I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;
But stronger passion does its pow'r control.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

With this he did a herd of goats control,
Which by the way he met, and slyly stole;
Clad like a country swain he pip'd and sung,
And playing drove his jolly troop along. Dryden.

O, dearest Andrew, says the humble droll, Henceforth may I obey, and thou control. Prior.

3. To overpower; to confute: as, he controlled all the evidence of his adversary.

As for the time while he was in the Tower, and the manner of his brother's death, and his own escape, she knew they were things that a very few could control. Bacon's Henry VII.

CONTROLLABLE. adj. [from control.]
Subject to control; subject to command; subject to be over-ruled.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore, its his present workings, not controllable by reason. South.

CONTROLLER. n. f. [from control.] One that has the power of governing or restraining; a superintendent.

He does not calm his contumelious spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant controller. Shakspeare.

The great controller of our fate
Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate.
Dryden.

CONTROLLERSHIP. n. f. [from controller.]
The office of a controller.

CONTROLMENT. n. f. [from control.]

1. The power or act of superintending or restraining.

2. The state of being restrained; restraint.
They made war and peace with one another, without controlment. Davies on Ireland.

3. Opposition; confutation.

Were it reason that we should suffer the same to pass without controlment, in that current meaning, whereby every where it prevaleth. Hooker.

4. Resistance; hostility.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood, Controlment for controlment. Shakspeare.

CONTROVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.] Relating to disputes; dispu-tations.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.
Locke.

CONTROVERSY. n. f. [controversia, Lat.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day they were first brought forth. Hooker.

Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Timothy.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,
Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt. Denh.

This left no room for controversy about the title,
nor for encroachment on the right of others.
Locke.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked. Deuteronomy.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations.
Jeremiah.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy. Shak.

To CONTROVERT. v. a. [controverto, Lat.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them,
he may do it very safely for me. Cheyne.

Hooker seems to use the word contro-verse, if it be not an erratum.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts, that, in litigations and controverted causes of such quality, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.

CONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.] Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discouraging of matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without arrogancy intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CONTROVERTIST. n. f. [from controvert.]
Disputant; a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles? Tillotson.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [contumax, Lat.] Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexible.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave. Ayliffe's Parergon.

There is another very efficacious method for subduing of the most obstinate contumacious sinner, and bringing him into the obedience of the faith of Christ. Hammond's Fundamentals.

CONTUMACIOUSLY. adv. [from contumacious.] Obstinately; stubbornly; inflexibly; perversely.

CONTUMACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contu-macious.] Obstinacy; perverseness; inflexibility; stubbornness.

From the description I have given of it, a judgment may be given of the difficulty and con-

CONTUMACY. n. f. [from contumacia,
Latin.]

1. Obstinacy; perverseness; stubbornness; inflexibility.

Such acts
Of contumacy will provoke the Highest
To make death in us live. Milton.

2. [In law.] A wilful contempt and disobedience to any lawful summons or judicial order. Ayliffe's Parergon.

These certificates do only, in the generality, mention the party's contumacies and disobedience.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTUMELIOUS. adj. [contumeliosus, Lat.]

temptuous.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market-place produc'd they me
To be a publick spectacle. Shakspeare.

In all the quarrels and tumults at Rome, though the people frequently proceeded to rude contumelious language, yet no blood was ever drawn in any popular commotions, till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

2. Inclined to utter reproach or practise insults; brutal; rude.

There is yet another sort of contumelious persons, who indeed are not chargeable with that circumstance of ill-employing their wit; for they use none of it. Government of the Tongue.

Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, madbrain'd war. Shaksp.

3. Productive of reproach; shameful; ignominious.

As it is in the highest degree injurious to them, so it is contumelious to him. Decay of Piety.

CONTUMELIOUSLY. adv. [from contumelious.] Reproachfully; contemptuously; rudely.

The people are not wont to take so great offence, when they are excluded from honours and offices, as when their persons are contumeliously trodden upon. Hooker.

Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace. Shak.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contumelious.] Rudeness; reproach.

CONTUMELY. n. f. [contumelia, Lat.] Rudeness; contemptuousness; bitterness of language; reproach.

If the helm of chief government be in the hands of a few of the wealthiest, then laws, providing for continuance thereof, must make the punishment of contumely and wrong, offered unto any of the common sort, sharp and grievous, that so the evil may be prevented. Hooker.

Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pang of despis'd love, the law's delay.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

It was undervalued and depressed with some bitterness and contumely. Clarendon.

Why should any man be troubled at the contumelies of those, whose judgment deserves not to be valued? Tillotson.

Eternal contumely attend that guilty title, which claims exemption from thought, and arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes. Addison.

TO CONTUSE. v. a. [contusus, Latin.]

1. To beat together; to bruise.

Of their roots, barks, and seeds, contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watered with warm water, there came forth herbs much like the other. Bacon.

2. To bruise the flesh without a breach of the continuity.

The ligature contuses the lips in cutting them, so that they require to be digested before they can unite. Wiseman.

CONTUSION. n. f. [from contusio.]

1. The act of beating or bruising.
2. The state of being beaten or bruised.

Take a piece of glass, and reduce it to powder, it acquiring by contusion a multitude of minute surfaces, from a diaphanous, degenerates into a white body. Boyle on Colours.

3. A bruise; a compression of the fibres, distinguished from a wound.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all bruise of time. Shaksp.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shaks.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravensstein, that he stirr'd not; and likewise held in strait siege the town. Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and coop'd up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,

Coop'd up a second time within your town!

Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;

Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Coop'd up in a narrow isle, observing dreams

With flattering wizards. Dryden.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,

Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke.

They are coop'd in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again!

Pope.

COOPE'E. n. f. [coupé, French.] A motion in dancing.COOPER. n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child.

COOPERAGE. n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.To COOPERATE. v. n. [con and opera, Latin.]1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension. Rogers.

COOPERATION. n. f. [from cooperate.]

The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

COOPERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.]

Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR. n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION. n. f. [coopto, Lat.] Adoption; assumption.COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Lat.] Holding the same rank;

not being subordinate. Thus shellfish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.]

In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. f. [from coordinate.]

The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION. n. f. [from coordinate.]

The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optinacy, and democracy. Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lysidius has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

COOT. n. f. [maer-koet, Dut. colée, Fr.]

A small black waterfowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt

Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.

COP. n. f. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.]

The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cop of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

CO'PAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.]

Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hale.

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Conwell.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. f. An equal share of coparceners.

Phillips' World of Words.

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.]

One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,

Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milton.

Shall I to him make known

As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happiness with me? Or rather not;

But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,

Without copartner. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rather by them

I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell

Copartner in these regions of the world. Milton.

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.]

The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale.

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed.

Hanmer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shaks.

COPAYVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written

capiwi, copiwi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. f. [See Cop.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained Within this goodly cope, both most and least,
Their being have, and daily are increas'd. Spenser.

Over head the dismal liſs
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew,
And flying vaulted either hoſt with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together ruſh'd
Both battles main. Milton's Paradise Loſt.
The ſcholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is ſo knowing as his maſter. Dryden.

To COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.
A very large bridge, that is all made of wood,
and coped over head. Addiſon on Italy.
2. To contend with; to oppoſe.
Know my name is loſt,
By treaſon's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adverſary
I come to cope. Shakſpeare's King Lear.
3. To reward; to give in return.
I and my friend
Have, by your wiſdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thouſand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal. Shakſpeare.

To COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to ſtruggle; to ſtrive. It has with before the thing or perſon oppoſed. [In this ſenſe it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopēn, to buy, or ſome other word of the ſame import;
ſo that to cope with ſignifies to interchange blows, or any thing elſe, with another.]

Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruſe the men
We ſhould have cop'd withal. Shakſ. Henry iv.
It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this ſhame,
That copes with death itſelf, to 'ſcape from it. Shakſpeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, ſelf-deceiv'd
And raſh, beforehand had no better weigh'd
The ſtrength he was to cope with, or his own. Milton.

They perfectly underſtood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Eſtrange.
On every plain,
Hoſt cop'd with hoſt, dire was the din of war. Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itſelf firſt to eaſier ſubjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known;
and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by ſlow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy ſucceſs. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindneſs or ſentiments.

Thou freſh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force muſt know
The royal fool thou cop'ſt with. Shakſpeare.
Thou art e'en as juſt a man,
As e'er my converſation cop'd withal. Shakſp.

To COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in uſe.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when,
He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakſ.

COPESMATE. n. ſ. [perhaps for cuſmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the ſame cope, for houſe.]
Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever ſtaid in place, ne ſpake to wight,
Till that the fox his copſmate he had found. Hubbard's Tale.

COPIER. n. ſ. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a tranſcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and tranſcribers. Addiſon.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imi-tator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others. Dryden.

Let the faint copier, on old Tiber's ſhore,
Nor mean the taſk, each breathing buſt explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace. Tickel.

CO'PING. n. ſ. [from cope.] The upper tire of maſonry which covers the wall.

All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, even from the foundation unto the coping. Kings.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble ſhew by their graceful projections. Addiſon's Freeholder.

COPIOUS. adj. [copia, Lat.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Roſe, as in dance, the ſtately trees, and ſpread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.
Full meaſure only bounds

Exceſs, before the all-bounteous king, who ſhow'r'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious uſe of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treaſures forth
In various converſe. Thomſon's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my ſong
Henceforth, and never ſhall my harp thy praife Forget, nor from thy Father's praife diſjoin. Milton.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

2. At large; without brevity or concife-neſs; diffusely.

Theſe ſeveral remains have been ſo copiouſly deſcribed by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new diſcoveries on ſo beaten a ſubject. Addiſon.

CO'PIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

2. Diffuſion; exuberance of ſtyle.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiouſneſs of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his buſineſs to reach the concifeſneſs of Demofthenes. Dryden.

CO'PIST. n. ſ. [from copy.] A copier;
a tranſcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. ſ. A piece of ground which terminates with an acute angle. Diſc.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Riſing to a top or head.

It was broad in its baſis, and roſe copped like a ſugar-loaf. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A galeated eſchinus being copped and ſomewhat conje. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. ſ. [This word is variously ſpelt: as copel, cupel, cuple, and cupple;
but I cannot find its etymology.] An inſtrument uſed in chymiſtry, in the form of a diſh, made of aſhes, well waſhed, to cleanſe them from all their ſalt; or of bones thoroughly calcined.
Its uſe is to try and purify gold and ſilver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expoſing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while.
The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in droſs, which is called the litharge of gold and ſilver. The refiners call the coppel a teſt. Harris.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. [koper, Dutch; cuprum,
Latin.] One of the fix primitive metals.

Copper is the moſt ductile and malleable metal after gold and ſilver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed braſs; a compoſition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and braſs, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, uſed for figures and ſtatues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than ſilver, lead, and gold. Hill on Foffils.

Two veſſels of fine copper, precious as gold.
Ezra.

CO'PPER. n. ſ. A veſſel made of copper; commonly uſed for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen veſſels. Bacon.

COPPER-NOSE. n. ſ. [copper and nose.] A red noſe.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praife for a good complexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-noſe. Shakſ.

Gutta roſacea ariſeth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being ſcratched, looks red, and riſes in great welks, rendering the viſage fiery; and makes copper-noſes, as we generally expreſs them.
Wiſeman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. ſ. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impreſſion, diſtinguiſhed from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. ſ. [copper and work.]
A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This is like thoſe wrought at copper-works.
Woodward.

CO'PPERAS. n. ſ. [kopperooſe, Dut. couperouſe, Fr. ſuppoſed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three ſorts of vitriol; the green, the bluiſh green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly ſold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of ſtones found on the ſea-ſhore in Ef-ſex, Hampſhire, and ſo weſtward, ordinarily called gold ſtones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are expoſed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and diſſolves the ſtones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is firſt put old iron, which, in boiling, diſſolves. This factitious copperas, in many reſpects, agrees with the native green vitriol. Chambers. Hill.

It may be queſtioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be tranſmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after converſion. Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. ſ. [copper and smith.]
One that manufactures copper.

Salmoncus, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad copperſmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

CO'PPERWORM. n. ſ. [teredo, Lat.]

1. A little worm in ſhips.
2. A worm that fretteth garments.
3. A worm breeding in one's hand. Ainſworth.

Co'PPERy. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

CO'PPICE. n. f. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] A low wood cut at stated times for fuel; a place overrun with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copses of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakspeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coalmines. Locke.

Co'PPLE-DUST. n. f. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copple-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver. Bacon.

CO'PPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

Co'PPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppied. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. f. [abbreviated from coppice.] A low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Garew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden.

To COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift.

CO'PULA. n. f. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition: as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts' Logic.

To CO'PULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

To CO'PULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Whifman.

COPULA'TION. n. f. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneft. Hooker.

CO'PULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts.

CO'PY. n. f. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuiusdam facta est copia exscribendi.] Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.
I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it. Shaksp.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;

But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shaksp.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. f. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. f. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to show but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tennement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-hold is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vastum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Corwell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. f. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

To CO'PY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryden.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,
Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

To CO'PY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison's Spectator.

To COQUE'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord, looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

To COQUE'T. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,
I saw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUE'TRY. n. f. [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Addison.

COQUE'TTE. n. f. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.
A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled. Arbutnot.

CO'RACLE. n. f. [cwraugle, Welsh; probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CORAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom. Hill's Mat. Med.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see. Bacon.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He hears the crackling found of coral woods,
And sees the secret source of subterranean floods. Dryden's Virgil.

A turret was inclos'd
Within the wall, of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight. Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral? Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens. Miller.

CORALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm. Woodward.

CORALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white. Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse. Mortimer.

CORALLOID. } adj. [κοραλλοειδης] Resembling coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions. Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it. Woodward on Fossils.

CORANT. n. f. [courant, Fr.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit. Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin. Walsh.

CORBAN. n. f. [קרבן] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion. King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited. Calmet.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked.

For fiker thy head very tottie is,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss. Spenser.

CORBEILS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CORBEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CORBEL. } n. f.
CORBIL. }

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CORD. n. f. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Lat. corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Joshua.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These num'rous cords are thro' the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

COR'DAGE. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made,
Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade. Drayton.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.

Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Arbutnot on Coins.

CORDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window. Shakspeare.

CORDELYER. n. f. A Franciscan friar: so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CORDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have shortly ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.

Cordials of pity give me now,
For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.

Your warrior offering that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind. Dryden.

CORDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wiseman.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstrueting of christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He, with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton.

CORDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CORDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it. South's Sermons.

CO'RDINER. n. f. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CO'RDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet.

Chambers.

CO'RDWAIN. n. f. Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain. Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWA'INER. n. f. [uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. f. [cœur, Fr. cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.

They wasteful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Lance the core,

And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself;
for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]
A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2.
Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found. Miller.

Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exodus.

CO'RINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply Delicious draughts. Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Broome.

CORINTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches en-
Vol. I.

compassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vil-lalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers.
Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticeem astrictum pice dimovebit

Amphoræ fumum bibere institutæ

Consule Tullo. Hor.

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I pr'ythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakspeare.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.
King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.

Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift.

CO'RKY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corky arms.

Shakspeare.

CO'R MORANT. n. f. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakspeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peachum.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
Sat like a cormorant. Milton Par. Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ.

It is found in all the Teutonick dialects;
as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.
Shakspeare.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knolles.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthrashed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season. Job.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet

Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakspeare.

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake. Shakspeare.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain or towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wiseman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gath'ring rain.

Gay's Past.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,

An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorns. Swift.

TO CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,

That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shaksp.

You may soon enjoy the gallant sights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's corn-fields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.] A plant. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.
Hosea.

CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the bluebottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and furmitory. Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August.
The seeds should be sown in March; they require a good soil. Mortimer.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.]
One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grafter, a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great lead-man. Bacon.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [from corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers. Mortimer.

CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by fitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the thrillecorn-pipes, echoing loud to arms, To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Tickel.

CORN-ROCKET. n. f. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

CORN-ROSE. n. f. A species of poppy.

CORN-SALLAD. n. f. [from corn and sallad.] An herb, whose top-leaves are a sallet of themselves. Mortimer.

CORNAGE. n. f. [from corne, Fr. cornu, Lat.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

CORNCHANDLER. n. f. [from corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

CORNCUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wifeman.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator.

CORNEL. } n. f. [from cornus, Lat.]

CORNE'LIAN-TREE. } The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work. Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon.

A huntress issuing from the wood, Reclining on her cornel spear she stood. Dryden.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows The fruits of cornel, as they feast around. Pope.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed; Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest, And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

CORNE'LIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNE'LIAN MUSE. n. f. [Fr.] A kind of rustic flute.

CORNEOUS. adj. [from corneus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dim-sighted. Brown.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter. Woodward.

CORNER. n. f. [from cornel, Welsh; cornier, French.]

1. An angle; a place enclosed by two walls or lines which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house. Proverbs.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. Acts.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection. Davies.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul. Addison.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day, Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth Let liberty make use of. Shakspeare's Tempest.

I turn'd, and tried each corner of my bed, To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost. Dryden.

CORNER-STONE. n. f. [from corner and stone.]

The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner-stone? Shakspeare.

A mason was fitting a corner-stone. Howel.

CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the fore-teeth between the middling teeth and the tusks; two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot when the horse is four years and a half old. Farrier's Dict.

CORNERWISE. adv. [from corner and wise.]

Diagonally; with the corner in front.

CORNET. n. f. [from cornette, Fr.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets. 2 Samuel.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns. Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear; Under an actor's nose, he's never near. Dryden.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped. Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken. Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop.

4. CORNET of a Horse, is the lowest part of his pastern, that runs round the coffin, and is distinguished by the hair that joins and covers the upper part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

5. A scarf anciently worn by doctors. Diä.

6. A headdress. Diä.

7. CORNET of Paper, is described by Skinner to be a cap of paper, made by retailers for small wares.

CORNETTER. n. f. [from cornet.] A blower of the cornet.

So great was the rabble of trumpetters, cornetters, and other musicians, that even Claudius himself might have heard them. Hakewill.

CORNICIE. n. f. [from corniche, French.] The highest projection of a wall or column.

The cornice of the Palazzo Farnese, which makes so beautiful an effect below, when viewed more nearly, will be found not to have its just measure. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The walls were massy brass, the cornice high Blue metals crown'd, in colours of the sky. Pope's Odyssey.

CORNICE Ring. [In gunnery.] The next ring from the muzzle backwards. Chambers.

CORNICLE. n. f. [from cornu, Lat.] A little horn.

There will be found, on either side, two black filaments, or membranous strings, which extend unto the long and shorter cornicle, upon protrusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNICULATE. adj. [from cornu, Lat.] A term in botany.

Corniculate plants are such as produce many distinct and horned pods; and corniculate flowers are such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn. Chambers.

CORNICICK. adj. [from cornu and facio, Lat.] Productive of horns; making horns. Diä.

CORNICEROUS. adj. [from corniger, Latin.] Horned; having horns.

Nature, in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher, and reclining, as in bucks. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNUCOP'IA. n. f. [Lat.] The horn of plenty; a horn topped with fruits and flowers in the hands of a goddess.

To CORNU'TE. v. a. [from cornutus, Lat.] To bestow horns; to cuckold.

COR'NY. adj. [from cornu, horn, Lat.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

Up stood the corny reed, Embattel'd in her field. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [from cornu.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant, 'Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want; By constant journeys careful to prepare Her stores, and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

3. Containing corn.

They lodge in habitations not their own, By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

COROLLARY. n. f. [from corollarium, Latin; from corolla; finis coronat opus: corollair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it. Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary, Rather than want. Shakspeare's Tempest.

CORONA. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble thew by their graceful projections.

Spenser.

Co'RONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Bacchus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine.

Spenser.

Co'RONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal future.

Co'RONARY. adj. [coronarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries.

Bentley.

CORONATION. n. f. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,

To shew my duty in your coronation.

Shakespeare.

A cough, fir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day

Shaks.

Now emprefs fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh—'s coronation through the town.

Dryd.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene,

See coronations rise on ev'ry green.

Pope.

Co'RONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to inquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impennelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned.

Shakespeare.

Co'RONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital.] the diminutive of corona, a crown.

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery

Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket.

Shakespeare.

All the rest are countesses.

—Their coronets say so.

Shakespeare.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.

Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear.

Pope.

2. An ornamental headdress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl.

Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,

In curls, on either cheek play'd.

Milton.

Co'RPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from caporal, Fr.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corp'ral whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would set me clear.

Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him.

Harris.

CORPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses right well supplied.

Shakespeare.

Render to me some corporal sign about her,

More evident than this.

Shakespeare.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding.

Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind.

Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air; and what seem'd corporal

Melted, as breath, into the wind.

Shakespeare.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit.

Milton.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corporal.]

The quality of being imbodyed.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all others, the most subtle and pure.

Raleigh's History.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.]

Bodily.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus.

Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled.

Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons.

Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall.

Shakespeare.

CORPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.]

The state of a body corporate; a community.

Diſt.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

A body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir.

Cowell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard to their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men.

Hooker.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which doth her root from God and nature take;

Ten thousand men she doth together draw,

And of them all one corporation make.

Davies.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

The state of being imbodyed.

Diſt.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; material; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,

Though numberless, to his omnipotence,

That to corporeal substances could add

Speed almost spiritual.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.

South's Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense.

Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,

And thou from thy corporeal prison freed.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye

On the young gnat, or new engender'd fly.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one.

Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Lat.]

Materiality; the quality of being imbodyed; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity.

Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity.

Glanville's Seepsis.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure.

Stillingfleet.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporify.]

The act of giving body or palpability.

To CORPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.]

To imbody; to inspissate into body.

Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified

Boyle.

CORPS. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

CORPSE. }

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld

Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene,

To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene,

Of chastity and honour virginal.

Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plenteous, all too little seems

To stuff this man, this vast unhide-bound corps.

Milton.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,

That scorns his brittle corps, and seems aham'd

He's not all spirit.

Dryden.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend

Greet my poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown.

Shakespeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand shapes display'd.
Dryden's Fables.

See where the corps of thy dead son approaches.
Addison.

The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body.
Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.
Cold numbness freight bereaves
Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives.
Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]
CORPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdalous corpulence, my love had grown.
Donne.

It is but one species of corpulency; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spiffitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.]

Fleshy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when,
with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it mak-eth the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CORPUSCULE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.]

A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.
Newton

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?
Watts' Logick.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from cor-
CORPUSCULARIAN. } pusculum, Latin.]

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.
It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscu-larians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the periphrastics. Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion. Bentley.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

TO CORRA'DE. v. a. [corrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradation, and conjunction of beams. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TO CORRECT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum,
Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts
the confidence of sinning. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him.
Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink:
its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his.
Dryden.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete. Felton.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shaksp.

An offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution. Shakspere.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction. Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add
Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correction.]

One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspere.

I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished correc-tioner. Shakspere's Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof. Hale.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit,
by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Discrepancy.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war. Pope.

These pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion.
Spratt's Sermons.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults: as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentine is a corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture.

Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Lat.] To have a reciprocal relation; as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [from con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another.

South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other.

South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlativus.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [from corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objection; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction.

Government of the Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [from con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.

Holder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that.

Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. f. [from cor-
CORRESPONDENCY. } respond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction.

Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations, keep the same to one another.

Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms.

King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us.

Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time; my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter.

Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state.

Bacon.

CORRESPONDENT. adj. [from correspond.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep.

Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind, Five correspondent are to earth assign'd.

Dryden.

CORRESPONDENT. n. f. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad.

Denham's Dedication.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,

And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts

Sperre up the sons of Troy.

Shakspeare.

CORRIDOR. n. f. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long aisle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other.

Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost entirely ruined.

Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE. adj. [from corrigo, Lat.]

1. That may be altered or amended.

2. That is a proper object of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language.

Howel.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners: so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will.

Shakspeare's Othello.

CORRIVAL. n. f. [from con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governours commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other.

Spenser on Ireland.

He, that doth redeem her thence might wear Without corrival all her dignities.

Shakspeare.

CORRIVALRY. n. f. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

CORROBORANT. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power to give strength.

There be divers sorts of bracelets fit to comfort the spirits; and they be of three intentions, refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient.

Bacon.

TO CORROBORATE. v. a. [from con and roboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom.

Bacon.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it.

Bacon.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgment.

Wotton.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby.

Watts.

CORROBORATION. n. f. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboration of the marriage.

CORROBORATIVE. adj. [from corroborate.] Having the power of increasing strength.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried.

Wise man's Surgery.

TO CORRODE. v. a. [from corrodo, Latin.]

To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode

The bad with bad, a spider with a toad; For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill, And make her do much good against her will.

Donne.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrise, is wont to reduce it to a green-blue solution.

Boyle on Colours.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Hannibal the Pyreneans pass, And steepy Alps, the inounds that nature cast; And with corroding juices, as he went, A passage through the living rock he rent.

Dryden's Juvenal.

CORRO'SION. n. s. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrua here employed have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

CORRO'SIVE. adj. [from corrodo, Latin.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

Gold, after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew's Cosmologia.

Tree cotton, with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Miller.

To Co'tTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a knap.

Whom I'll intreat to lead me.
Shakspeare.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;
Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass.
Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread.
Dryd.

Sometimes providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it.
South.

CO'VERLET. n. s. [couvrelet, Fr.]

The outermost of the bedclothes; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lilies and in violets,
And silken curtains over her display,
And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets.
Spenser.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread.
Dryden's Fables.

I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet.
Swift.

CO'VERT. n. s. [from cover; couvert, Fr.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab;
be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler.
Isaiah.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain.
Isaiah.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont.
Milton.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down Under the hospitable covert nigh
Of trees thick interwoven.
Milton.

Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.

Tow'rs him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood.

Thence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,
The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves.
Denham.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun.
Dryden.

The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert:
Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey.
Addison's Cato.

CO'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.]

1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.

You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden.
Bacon.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places.
Mortimer.

Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert yield.
Pope.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.

And let us presently go fit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.
Shakspeare.

By what best way,
Whether of open war, or covert guile,
We now debate.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

CO'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.]

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself! to have my body disabled, and my head fortified!
Dryden.

COVERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgment on the covert-way, because usually the besieged palliade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counter-scarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp.
Harris.

CO'VERTLY. adv. [from covert.]

Secretly; closely; in private; with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was hight)
Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise.
Spenser.

How can'st thou cross this marriage?
—Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me.
Shakspeare.

Amongst the poets, Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation.
Dryden.

CO'VERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.]

Secrecy; privacy.
Dict.

CO'VERTURE. n. s. [from covert.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other covering, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb.
Bacon's Natural History.

He saw their shame, that fought Vain covertures.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls, or other like coverture.
Woodward.

2. [In law.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation.

The infancy of king Edward vi. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland.
Davies on Ireland.

To CO'VET. v. a. [convoyer, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending man alive.
Shakspeare.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith.
Shakspeare. Macbeth.

O father! can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
And that the gen'rous mind releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath?
Dryden's Aeneid.

2. To desire earnestly.

All things coveting as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by offspring and propagation.
Hooker.

But covet earnestly the best gifts.
1 Cor.

To CO'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith.
1 Timothy.

CO'VETABLE. adj. [from covet.]

To be wished for; to be coveted.
Dict.

CO'VETISE. n. s. [convoytise, French.]

Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice,
Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store;
Whose need had end, but no end covetise.
Fairy Queen.

CO'VETOUS. adj. [convoyteux, French.]

1. Inordinately desirous; eager.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden's Aeneid.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices.
What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous.
Shakspeare.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh.
Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue,
Than this fair soul shall be.
Shakspeare.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation; and then his intentions are polluted.
Taylor.

CO'VETOUSLY. adv. [from covetous.]
Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for 't, he will supply us easily;
if he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it?
Shakspeare.

CO'VETOUSNESS. n. f. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of cove- tousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense. Taylor's Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks
it into the earth. Tillotson.

2. Eagerness; desire: in a neutral sense.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness.

Shakspeare's King John.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

There would be no walking in a shady wood, without springing a covey of toasts. Addison.

COUGH. n. f. [kuch, Dutch.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced coff.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,
While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore.

Smith.

To COUGH. v. n. [kuchen, Dutch.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink

The ale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakspeare.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Shakspeare.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs,
they have a faculty of calling it up by coughing.

Ray on the Creation.

I cough like Horace, and tho' lean, am short.

Pope's Epistles.

To COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough;
to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs; then into the aspera arteria, or windpipe; and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wise's Surgery.

CO'UGHER. n. f. [from cough.] One that coughs. DiA.

over the ground-plot, and the turned projecture arched with timber, lathed and plastered. Harris.

COULD. [the imperfect preterit of can.]
Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slanderously and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto. 2 Mac.

What if he did not all the ill he could?

Am I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden.

CO'ULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The sharp iron of the plough, which cuts
the earth perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Samuel.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clay is long and broad; and the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing. Mortimer.

CO'UNCIL. n. f. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness. Matthew.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth
In order came the grand infernal peers. Milton.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table. Addison.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The scepter'd heralds call

To council in the city gates: anon
Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd, Assemble, and harangues are heard. Milton.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the christian church, or from their synods or councils. Watts.

4. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people than a court. Bacon.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge

Either of king or council, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal. Shaksp.

COUNCIL-BOARD. n. f. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,

To-morrow morning to the council-board.
He be convened. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the coun- cil-board, they looked upon it as a work of that power they were obliged to trust. Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,
Must yield her foe the stronger cause;
A shame to one so much ador'd
For wisdom at Jove's council-board. Swift.

COUNSEL. n. f. [consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction.

There is as much difference between the coun- sel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. Bacon.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament. Clarendon.

Bereave me not,

Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

I hold as little counsel with weak fear

As you, or any Scot that lives. Shakspeare.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess, therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed. Hooker.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour.

Ecclesi.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord. Proverbs.

5. Secrecy; the secrets intrusted in consulting.

The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell
all. Shakspeare.

6. Scheme; purpose; design. Not in use.

The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. Psalms.

O God, from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed.

Common Prayer.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors. This seems only an abbreviature usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel. Shakspeare.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an overspeaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. Bacon.

What says my counsel learned in the law?

Pope.

To CO'UNSEL. v. a. [consilior, Latin.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,
Wouldst thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Shakspeare.

Truth shall nurse her;

Holy and heav'nly thoughts still counsel her.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled, and more for the good of them that counsel than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

Ill fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have coun- selled my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them.

Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The less had been our shame,

The less his counsel'd crime which brands the Grecian name. Dryden's Fables.

CO'UNSELLABLE. adj. [from counsel.]

Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinions of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more counselable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errors, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition. Clarendon.

CO'UNSELLOR. n. f. [from counsel. This should rather be written counsellor.]

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

2 Chronicles.

She would be a counsellor of good things, and a comfort in cares. Wisdom.

Are counsellors to fear. Shakspeare's Macb.

2. Confident; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise.

Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,

And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts: the first,
consilarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and withal of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince how far his prerogative extends.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. f. [from counsellor.]

The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship. Bacon.

To COUNT. v. a. [compter, Fr. computare, Latin.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here thro' this grate I can count every one, And view the Frenchmen. Shakspeare.

The vicious count their years; virtuous their acts. Johnson.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity. South.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie, They count the tedious hours by months and years. Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low; Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won,

When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs. Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Genesis.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehendeth any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, negations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial. 1 Sam.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy The publick marks of honour and reward Confer'd upon me. Milton's Agonistes.

You would not wish to count this man a foe! In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate. Philips' Briton.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All th' impossibilities, which poets Count to extravagance of loose description, Shall sooner be. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother.

To COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme: with upon.

I think it a great error to count upon the genius of a nation, as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

CO'UNTENANCE. n. f. [contenance, French.]

1. The form of the face; the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and smiling; her head, bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush, Nor change my countenance for this arrest:

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakspeare.

So spake our fire, and by his countenance seem'd

Entering on studious thoughts abstruse. Milton.

To whom, with countenance calm, and soul sedate,

Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look, Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;

Ev'n kept her countenance, when the lid remov'd Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd. Dryden.

The two great maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases, in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded. Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence. Spratt's Sermons.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest: a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison's Freeholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will, as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the midst crowd, Thought all their glory vain in knightly view, And that great prince too, exceeding proud, That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd. Spenser.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of the christian religion but in private. Hooker.

His majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate. Davies on Ireland.

Now then we'll use His countenance for the battle; which being done,

Let her who would be rid of him devise His speedy taking off. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness. Atterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent thereat. Alscham's Schoolm.

O you blessed ministers above!

Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time

Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up

In countenance. Shakspeare's Meas. for Meas.

Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,

While he did bear my countenance in the town. Shakspeare.

To CO'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support; to patronise; to vindicate.

Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. Exodus.

This conceit, though countenanced by learned men, is not made out either by experience or reason. Bruton.

This national fault, of being so very talkative, looks natural and graceful in one that has grey hairs to countenance it. Addison.

2. To make a show of.

Each to these ladies love did countenance, And to his mistress each himself strove to advance. Spenser.

3. To act suitably to any thing; to keep up any appearance.

Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,

To countenance this horror. Shakspeare.

To COUNTERBUFF. v. a. [from counter and buff.] To impel in a direction opposite to the former impulse; to strike back.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides
For'd back and forwards, in a circle rides, Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots
again,
Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again. Dryden.

COUNTERBUFF. n. f. [counter and buff.] A blow in a contrary direction; a stroke that produces a recoil.

He at the second gave him such a counterbuff, that, because Phalantus was not to be driven from the saddle, the saddle with broken girths was driven from the horse. Sidney.

Go, captain Stub, lead on, and show
What house you come of, by the blow
You give Sir Quintin, and the cuff
You 'scape o' th' sandbags counterbuff. Ben Jonson.

COUNCASTER. n. f. [from counter, for a false piece of money, and caster.] A word of contempt for an arithmetician; a book-keeper; a caster of accounts; a reckoner.

I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, must be let and calm'd,
By debtor and creditor, this countercaster. Shaks.
COUNCASTER. n. f. [counter and change.] Exchange; reciprocation.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

COUNCOUNTERFEIT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. That is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.

I learn

Now of my own experience, not by talk,
How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends
Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days
They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head. Milton.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Roscommon.

COUNCOUNTERFEIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another; an impostor.

I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man. Shakspeare.

This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where,
When I was stamp'd. Some coiner with his tools,
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dan of that time. Shakspeare.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real; though pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson.

COUNCOUNTERFEITER. n. f. [from counterfeit.] A forger; one who contrives copies to pass for originals.

Henry the Second altered the coin, which was corrupted by counterfeiters, to the great good of the commonwealth. Camden.

Swift.

COUNTERPO'ISON. n. f. [counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimated corrosive, and arsenick.

Arbutnot.

COUNTERPRESSURE. n. f. [counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,
That troops of atoms from all parts around,
Of equal number, and of equal force,
Should to this single point direct their course;
That so the counterpressure ev'ry way,
Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,
And by a steady poise the whole in quiet lay.

Blackmore.

COUNTERPRO'JECT. n. f. [counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch.

Swift.

And give not thus the countertime to fate.

Dryd.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The catastasis, called by the Romans stasis, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden.

To COUNTERVA'IL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off.

Hooker.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,

And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Q.

The outward streams, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending tide does exceed the other.

Wilkins' Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniencies that go along with it.

L'Estrange.

COUNTERVA'IL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present pleasure of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins where the action ends, and lasts for ever.

South's Sermons.

COUNTERVIE'W. n. f. [counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company.

Swift.

To COUNTERWORK. v. a. [counter and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:

That counterworks each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice.

Pope.

CO'UNTESS. n. f. [comitissa, Lat. comtesse, Fr.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the duchess of Norfolk.

—It is, and all the rest are countesses.

Shaksp.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abingdon to have been so truly loved by you while she was living, and so gratefully honoured after she was dead.

Dryden.

CO'UNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.]

The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them.

Locke.

CO'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kifs for kifs,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakspeare.

But oh, her mind, that orcus which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses.

Danne.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.

I see, I cried, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.

Pope's Odyssey.

CO'UNTRY. n. f. [contré, Fr. contrata, low Latin; supposed to be contracted from conterrata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed.

Spratt.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts; rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect,
Nature alone should be the architect;
She'd build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat.

Corwley.

I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country.

Speator.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,

Shakspeare.

4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.

The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country.

Spratt.

O save my country, heav'n! shall be your last.

Pope.

5. The inhabitants of any region.

All the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; all their pray'rs and love
Were set on Hereford.

Shakspeare.

CO'UNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that, having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal?

Locke.

I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances.

Speet.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood.

Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd, that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man.

Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house.

Locke.

The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat outdo him.

Locke.

Come, we'll e'en to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.

We make a country man dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

CO'UNTRYMAN. n. f. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakspeare.
Homer, great bard! so far ordain'd, arose;
And, bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the War.

2. A rustic; one that inhabits the rural parts.

All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.

A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Estrange.

CO'UNTY. n. f. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Lichfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties.

As we will ours. Shakspeare.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children. Addison's Spectator.

2. An earldom.

3. [compté.] A count; a lord. Obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman, The county Paris. Shakspeare.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberè ad gladium, sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Davies.

COUPÉE. n. f. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. Chambers.

COUPLE. n. f. [couple, French; copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stable-stand where I lodge my wife; I'll go in *couple*s with her, Than when I feel and see no further trust her. Shakspeare.

It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in *couple*s; they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and yours, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of crystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the *couple*s three, Ever true in loving be. Shakspeare.
Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as You gracious couple do. Shakspeare.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon.

He said: the careful couple join their tears, And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley.

To CO'UPLE. v. a. [copulo, Latin.]

1. To chain together.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakspeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store, To couple coming harms with sorrow past. Sidney.
And where'er we went, like Juno's swans, Still we went coupled and inseparable. Shakspeare.
Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together that it may be one. Exodus.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Peter.

Their concerns were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

Thou, with thy lusty crew, Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men, And coupled with them, and begot a race. Milt.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

After this alliance, Let tygers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. f. [couple and beg- gar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

COUPLET. n. f. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhymes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught With some unmeaning thing they call a thought; A needless Alexandrine ends the song, That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line, But with a sigh I wish it mine; When he can in one couplet fix More sense than I can do in six, It gives me such a jealous fit, I cry, pox take him and his wit! Swift.

2. A pair, as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove, Ere that her golden couplets are disclos'd, His silence will sit drooping. Shakspeare.

COURAGE. n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude, I have no relish of them. Shakspeare.

Their discipline Now mingled with their courage. Shakspeare.
Hope arms their courage; from their terrors they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison's Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes. Swift.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day. Amos.

To be his purveyor.

Shakspeare.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.

Bacon's Natural History.

I am continually starting hares for you to course; we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up.

Congreve.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.

When they have an appetite

To venery, let them not drink nor eat,

And course them oft, and tire them in the heat.

May's Virgil.

To COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The natural gates and alleys of the body.

Shakspeare.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme.

Shakspeare.

She did so course o'er my exteriors, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass.

Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,

And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.

Dryden.

All at once

Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend

And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,

All ether coursing in a maze of light.

Thomson.

Co'URSER. n. f. [from course; coursier, French.]

1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his coursier strong,
And Atin ay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong.

Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed

A pair of coursers, born of heav'nly breed;

Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,

Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire.

Th' impatient coursier pants in every vein,

And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;

Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,

And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.

Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares.

A leash is a leathern thing, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound.

Hammer.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. koert, Dutch; curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,

Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,

Than a grac'd palace.

Shakspeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

Isidiah.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.

Prior.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.

Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakspeare.

St. Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state.
Aiturbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall.
Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.
Dryden.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them.
Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable.
Shakspeare.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf.
Spektor.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er bend

Thy frailty virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryd. Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves.
Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing.
Swift to Gay.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you.
Ben Jonson.
Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighb'ring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Æneid.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Adams's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy offices.

The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain.
Swift.

COURT-DAY. n. f. [court and day.] Day on which justice is solemnly administered.

The judge took time to deliberate, and the next court-day he spoke.
Arbutnot and Pope.

COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.]
One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.

There are many ways of fallacy; such arts of giving colours, appearances, and resemblances, by this court-dresser, fancy.
Locke.

COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits bestowed by princes.

We part with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court-favours, and commissions; and at last, when we have sold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain.
L'Estrange.

COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.]
The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.

He can make obligations, and write court-hand.
Shakspeare.

COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady.
Locke.

COURTEOUS. adj. [courtois, French.]
Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred;
full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;
and his ascent is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courteous to the people.
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious.
South.

COURTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.]
Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed, yet he let them courteously pass.
Wotton.

Whilst Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courteously receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country.
Calamy's Sermons.

Alcinous, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courteously.
Broome.

COURTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courteous.]
Civility; complaisance.

COURTESAN. } n. f. [cortisana, low COURTEZAN. } Lat.] A woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan.
Shaksp.
With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.
Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtesan.
Wotton.

Charixus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.
Addison.

COURTESY. n. f. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; com- plaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.
Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.
Peacham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.
Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tap'ry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.
Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakspeare.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house Return, and force their scanty courtesy.
Shaksp.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.
Shakspeare.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.
Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a court'sy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is,
I endeavoured to make her look something christian-like.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the fa- vour of others: as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seized of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Anglia, or by the courtesy of England.
Cowell.

To COURTESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and court'sies there to me.
Shakspeare.

The petty traffickers,
That court'sy to them, do them reverence.
Shakspeare.

2. To make a reverence in the manner of ladies.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly court'sy to each other.
Prior.

COURTIER. n. f. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.—
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.
Shakspeare.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakspeare.

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state-affairs. Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What

Made thee, all honour'd, honest Roman Brutus, With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,

To drench the capitol? Shakspeare.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III.; not out of fear, but wisdom. Suckling.

CO'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

CO'URTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden's Remains.

CO'URLINESS. n. f. [from courtly.]

Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness. Lord Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.

CO'URLING. n. f. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben Jonson.

CO'URLTY. adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (excuse some courtly strains) No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

CO'URLTY. adv. In the manner of courts; elegantly.

They can produce nothing so courtly writ, or which expresses so much the conversation of a gentleman, as Sir John Suckling. Dryden.

CO'URSHIP. n. f. [from court.]

1. The act of soliciting favour.

He paid his courtship with the crowd, As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair offenses of love, As shall conveniently become you there. Shakspeare.

In tedious courtship we declare our pain, And ere we kindness find, first meet disdain. Dryden.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university, My modesty I give to soldiers bare; My patience to a gamester's share. Donne.

CO'USIN. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Latin.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macbeth unseam'd him.

Oh valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Shakspeare.

Tybal, my cousin! O my brother's child!

Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd

Of my dear kinsman. Shakspeare.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,

And cousin german to great Priam's seed. Shakspeare.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural anciently kine, or keen, now commonly cows; cu, Sax.

ke, Dutch.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bull's; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows, He fought himself some hospitable house; Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden's Fables.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd—

—Accursed be that tongue that tells me so, For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shakspeare.

By reason of their frequent revolts, they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cow'd their spirits. Horbel's Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd, Their horns of course are understood. Hudibras.

COW-HERD. n. f. [cow, and herd, Sax. a keeper.] One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. f. [cow and house.] The house in which kine are kept.

You must house your milch-cows, that you give hay to, in your cow-house all night. Mortimer.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. f. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [cow and wheat.] A plant.

CO'WARD. n. f. [coward, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musidorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

Tremble ye not, oh friends! and cowards fly, Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;

And rais'd the house with loud and coward cry. Shakspeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy, And ills foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

CO'WARDICE. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,

Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;

And with foul cowardice his carcase shame, Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name. Fairy Queen.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame, And cowardice alone is loss of fame:

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown, But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden.

This great, this holy, this terrible Being, is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rogers.

CO'WARDLINESS. n. f. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

CO'WARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Mean; befitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile, For fear of what might fall, so to prevent The time of life. Shakspeare.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South.

CO'WARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reprov'd them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

CO'WARDSHIP. n. f. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness. Not in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakspeare.

To Co'WER. v. n. [cwrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,

And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakspeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld, Approaching two and two; these cow'ring low With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cow'ring o'er a kitchen fire; I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

CO'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.]

Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit, That dares not undertake: he'll not see] wrong, Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare.

CO'WKEEPER. n. f. [cow and keeper.]

One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Brune.

COWL. n. f. [cuzle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wise man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)

He apprehended to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster.

CO'WSLIP. n. f. [paralysis; cur-lippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;

In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare.

Thy little sons

Permit to range the pastures: gladly they

Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet. Phillips.

COW-LUNGWORT. n. f. A species of mullein.

CO'XCOMB. n. f. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the patty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a stick, and cried, down, wantons, down! Shakespeare.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shak.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shak.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb filly,

Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools. Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCO'MICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jafon is as coy as is a maide;

He looked piteously, but nought he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,

A foe of folly and immodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.

Like Phœbus sung the no less am'rous boy:

Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

The Nile's coy source. Grainger.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!

No more; but make me happy to my gust,

That is, without your struggling. Dryden.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—

—Thus to coy it!

With one who knows you too! Rowe.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure. Not in use.

I'll mountebank their loves,

Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare.

CO'YLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said, his hand he coyly snatch'd away

From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman.

CO'YNESS. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and the putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags. Walton.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,

And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

CO'YSTREL. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:

The musket and the coyfiel were too weak,

Too fierce the falcon. Dryden.

COZ. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow

Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shakespeare.

To COZEN. v. a. [To cose is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat; because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so dilligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryd.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke.

CO'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call;
It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago

Like certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits, without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanville's Sceptis.

Strange coz'nage! none would live past years again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryd. Aur.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shaksp.

CRAB. n. f. [crabba, Sax. krabbe, Dut.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hoddmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon's Natural History.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus saith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock
Was graft with crab tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakespeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches. Shakespeare.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Shakespeare.

Tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent. Taylor.

Then parts the Twins and Crab, the Dog divides,

And Argo's keel, that broke the frothy tides. Greech.

CRAB. adj. It is used by way of contempt for any four or degenerate fruit: as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

Better gleanings their worn soil can boast
Than the crab vintage of the neighb'ring coast. Dryden.

CRA'BBED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; sour.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear,
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.

O, she is
Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;

And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakespeare.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when
Three crabbed months had tour'd themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shakspeare.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbed author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.

Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius
Are against gods, you know. Prior.

2. The chink, fissure, or vacuity made by disruption; a narrow breach.

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiseman.

At length it would crack in many places;
and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark, sky-colour. Newton's Opticks.

3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,
Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest:
Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast. Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick sound.

A fourth?—start eye!
What will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakspeare.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Addison.

and warm litter out of the stable; a good thickness, lest the frost crack them. Mortimer.

2. To break; to split.

O, madam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd. Shakspeare.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. Shakspeare.

Should some wild fig-tree take her native
bent,

And heave below the gaudy monument,
Would crack the marble titles, and disperse
The characters of all the lying verse. Dryden.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,
That finds philosophers such trouble;
Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.

3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

4. To break or destroy any thing.

You'll crack a quart together! Ha, will you not? Shakspeare.

Mr. Warburton has it, crush a cup of wine.

To crash, says Hammer, is to be merry: a crash being a word still used in some counties for a merry bout. It is surely better to read crack. See CRACK.

CRASH. n. f. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless Ilium,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash, Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. Shakspeare.

Moralizing sat I by the hazard-table: I looked upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did. Pope.

CRA'SIS. n. f. [κράσις.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him. Glanville.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger; as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis and constitution of the blood and spirits. Sooth.

CRASS. adj. [crassus, Lat.] Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Iron, in aquafortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward.

CRA'SSITUDE. n. f. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper, or parchment; for, if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon.

The dead sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk. Bacon's Natural History.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRASTINA'TION. n. f. [from cras, Lat. to-morrow.] Delay. Diä.

CRATCH. n. f. [creche, Fr. crates, Lat.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

To CRAVE. v. a. [crapian, Saxon.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole Litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved, at God's hands?
Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;

But for the mutable rank-scented many,
Let them regard me as I do not flatter. Shaksp.

The poor people, not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed.
Knolles.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend, the forbearance too of any action proposed. Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,
Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.
Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subjects arm'd, the more their princes gave,
Th' advantage only took the more to crave.
Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,
Is ever craving, and will still be poor?
Who cheats for halfpence, and who doffs his coat
To save a farthing in a ferry-boat? Dryden.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably.

Levity pulhes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety. L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it by some wicked action. South.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow
Your needful counsel to our businesses,
Which crave the instant use. Shaksp.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution; are acids, taken in too great quantities; four eruptions, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,
But more would prove
This heart too little, that too great. Suckling.

CRA'VEN. n. f. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life: perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock.]

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb? —
—A combs cock, so Kate will be my hen.
—No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.
Shaksp.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?
—He is a craven and a villain else. Shaksp.

CRA'VEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast
A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly. Spenser.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward. Shaksp.
Yet if the innocent some mercy find,
From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;
His noble foes durst not his craven kind Exasperate by such a bloody deed. Fairfax.

To CRA'VEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition to divine,
That cravens my weak hand. Shaksp.

CRA'VER. n. f. [from crave.] An insatiable asker. It is used in Clarissa.

CRAW. n. f. [kroe, Danish.] The crop or first stomach of birds.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, or at least into a kind of ante-stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

CRA'WFISH. n. f. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crevice; in French ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.

Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs-eyes. Hill.

To CRAWL. v. n. [krielen, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill. Milton.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryden.

The streams, but just contain'd within their bounds,

By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew's Cosmologia.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow creature, abject man. Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly, or timorously.

'Tis our first intent

To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl toward death. Shaksp.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes;
and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knolles.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side. Heylin.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryden's Juvenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!

A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then shrinks to earth again. Pope.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To advance slowly and sily.

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

4. To move about hated and despised.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth, before that undefiled tribunal? South.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race,

Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely
press'd

By his own sons, that pass him by unblest'd! Pope.

CRA'WLER. n. f. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

CRA'YFISH. n. f. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack saltiness requires slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crayfishes. Floyer.

CRA'YON. n. f. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line; that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

To CRAZE. v. a. [ecrafer, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration, the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of popish parents, doth seem crazed. Hooker.

Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lysander, yield Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shaksp.

Till length of years,
And sedentary numbness craze my limbs. Milt.
Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,
And craze their chariot wheels. Milton.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruisseth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer, true to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shaksp.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits; only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from crazed.] Decreptitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

CRA'ZINESS. n. f. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRA'ZY. adj. [ecrafé, French.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. Shaksp.

When people are crazy, and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken-witted; shattered in the intellect.

The queen of night, whose large command
Rules all the sea and half the land,
And over moist and crazy brains,
In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudib.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered.

Physick can but mend our crazy state,
Patch an old building, not a new create. Dryden.

Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered. Wake.

CREAGHT. n. f. [An Irish word.]

In these fast places, they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage. Davies.

To CREAGHT. v. n.

It was made penal to the English to permit the Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices. Davies.

To CREAK. v. n. [corrupted from crack.]

1. To make a harsh protracted noise.

Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Shakspeare's King Lear.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used of animals.

The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They tried with heat, and I with fierce desire. Dryden.

CREAM. n. f. [cremor, Latin.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter; the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakspeare.

I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream. Shak.
Cream is matured and made to rise speedily,
By putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

How the drudging goblin swet,
To earn his cream-bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrif'd the corn. Milt.

Let your various creams incircled be
With swelling fruit, just ravish'd from the tree. King.

Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream; and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor, called skimmed milk. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. It is used for the best part of any thing: as, the cream of a jest.

To CREAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To skim off the cream.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing: so used somewhere by Swift.

To CREAM. v. n. To gather cream.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shaks.

CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and face.]
Pale; coward-looking.

Thou cream-fac'd lown,
Where got'st thou that goose-look? Shakspeare.

CRE'AMY. adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.

CRE'ANCE. n. f. [French.] In falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leath when she is first lured.

CREASE. n. f. [from creta, Latin, chalk. Skinner.] A mark made by doubling any thing.

Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp pen-knife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. Swift.

To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.

To CREATE. v. a. [creo, Latin.]

1. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Genesis.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland
Would create foldiers, and make women fight. Shakspeare.

His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies. King Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were. Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate? Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbuthnot.

3. To beget.

And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate. Shakspeare.

4. To invest with any new character.

Arise, my knights o' th' battle: I create you Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates. Shakspeare.

5. To give any new qualities; to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron. Davies on Ireland.

CREA'TION. n. f. [from create.]

1. The act of creating, or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then the whole creation came,
And from their natures Adam them did name. Denham.

Such was the faint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses-like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation blest'd. Dryden's Fables.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year. Dryden's Virgil.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men. Parnel.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but A dagger of the mind, a false creation, Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain? Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CREA'TIVE. adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson's Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.

CREA'TOR. n. f. [creator, Latin.] The being that beflows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great Creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milton.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

CREA'TURE. n. f. [creatura, low Latin.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures. Stillingfleet.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light. Bacon.

Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only in killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self sake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spens.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lie. Spenser.

Tho' he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

He would into the stews,
And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakspeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, fir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature, and then kiss me hard. Shakspeare.

Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies. Dryden's Virgil.

Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

7. A person who owes his rise or his fortune to another.

He sent to colonel Massey to send him men, which he, being a creature of Essex's, refused. Clarendon.

The duke's creature he desired to be esteemed. Clarendon.

Great princes thus, when favourites they raise,
To justify their grace, their creatures praise. Dryden.

CRE'ATURELY. adj. [from creature.] Having the qualities of a creature.

The several parts of relatives, or creaturely infinities, may have finite proportions to one another. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

CREBRITUDE. n. f. [from creber, frequent, Latin.] Frequency. Diſ.

CREBROUS. adj. [from creber, Latin.] Frequent. Diſ.

CREDENCE. n. f. [from credo, Latin; credence, Norman French.]

1. Belief; credit.

Ne let it seem that credence this exceeds,
For he that made the fame was known right well
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakspeare.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl; but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

CREDE'NDA. n. f. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith: distinguished in theology from agenda, or practical duties.

These were the great articles and credenda of christianity, that so much startled the world. South.

CREDENT. adj. [credens, Latin.]

1. Believing; easy of belief.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,

If with too credent ear you list' his songs. Shakspeare.

2. Having credit; not to be questioned. Less proper.

My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakspeare.

CREDENT'IAL. n. f. [from credens, Lat.]

That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Reliq.

CREDIBILITY. n. f. [from credible.]

Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Atterbury.

CREDIBLE. adj. [credibilis, Lat.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CREDIBLENESS. n. f. [from credible.]

Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibility of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practitioner of physick. Boyle.

CRE'DIBLY. adv. [from credible.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible; being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CREDIT. n. f. [credit, French.]

1. Belief; faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. 1 Maccabees.

I may give credit to reports. Addison's Spect.
Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,

To maids alone and children are reveal'd:
What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it,
Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hooker.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.

5. Trust reposed, with regard to property: correlative to debt.

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the public credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned. Addison.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother. Sidney.

They sent him likewise a copy of their supplication to the king, and desired him to use his credit that a treaty might be entered into. Clarendon.

Having credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, he troubled not himself for that of other men. Clarendon.

TO CRE'DIT. v. a. [credo, Latin.]

1. To believe.

Now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage. Shakspeare.

To credit the unintelligibility both of this union and motion, we need no more than to consider it. Glanville.

2. To procure credit or honour to any thing.

May here her monument stand so,
To credit this rude age; and show
To future times, that even we Some patterns did of virtue see. Waller.

It was not upon design to credit these papers, nor to compliment a society so much above flattery. Glanville.

At present you credit the church as much by your government, as you did the school formerly by your wit. South.

3. To trust; to confide in.

4. To admit as a debtor.

CREDITABLE. adj. [from credit.]

1. Reputable; above contempt.

He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbutnot.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more specious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson.

CREDITABLENESS. n. f. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these snares, there is none more entangling than the *creditable*ness and repute of customary vices. Decay of Piety.

CREDITABLY. adv. [from creditable.]

Reputably; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too. South.

CREDITOR. n. f. [creditor, Latin.]

1. He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.

There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakspeare.

I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul. Addison's Spectator.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

2. One who credits, one who believes. Not used.

Many sought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Shakspeare.

CREDULITY. n. f. [credulité, Fr. credulitas, Lat.] Easiness of belief; readiness of credit.

The poor Plangus, being subject to that only disadvantage of honest hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.

The prejudice of credulity may, in some measure, be cured, by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts' Logick.

CRE'DULOUS. adj. [credulus, Latin.]

Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Who now enjoys thee credulous all gold,
Who always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee of flattery gales
Unmindful, hapless he,

T' whom thou untry'd seem'st fair. Milton.

CRE'DULOUSNESS. n. f. [from credulous.]

Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. f. [from credo, the first word of the apostles creed.]

1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.

The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Will they, who decry creeds and creedmakers, say that one who writes a treatise of morality ought not to make in it any collection of moral precepts? Fiddes' Sermons.

2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.

For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed. Shakspeare.

To CREEK. v. a. [See To CREAK.] To make a harsh noise.

Shall I stay here,

Creeking my shoes on the plain masonry? Shakspeare.

CREEK. n. f. [cnecca, Saxon; kreke, Dutch.]

1. A prominence or jut in a winding coast.

As streams, which with their winding banks do play,

Stopp'd by their creeks, run softly through the plain. Davies.

of red seem to be little else than heightened yellow. Boyle on Colours.

Why does the foil endure

The blushing poppy with a crimson hue? Prior.

2. Red in general.

Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy, in her naked seeing self? Shakespeare.

Beauty's ensign yet

Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks. Shaksp.
The crimson stream stain'd his arms around,
And the disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden's Æneid.

To CRIMSON. v. a. [from the noun.] To die with crimson.

Pardon me, Julius. Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart!

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe. Shakespeare.

CRINCUM. n. f. [a cant word.] A cramp;
a contraction; whimsy.

For jealousy is but a kind

Of clap and crincum of the mind. Hudib.

To CRINGE. v. a. [from kriechen, German.] To draw together; to contract.

Whip him, fellows,

Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakespeare.

To CRINGE. v. n. To bow; to pay court with bows; to fawn; to flatter.

Flatterers have the flexor muscles so strong,
that they are always bowing and cringing. Arbutnot.

The cringing knave, who seeks a place
Without success, thus tells his case. Swift.

CRINGE. n. f. [from the verb.] Bow;
servile civility.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me,
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling looks. Philips.

ness. Diä.

CRIPPLE. n. f. [cnypel, Sax. krepel, Dutch.] A lame man; one that has lost or never enjoyed the use of his limbs. Donne, with great appearance of propriety, writes it creep, from creep.

He, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear:
Some tardy cripple had the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried. Shakespeare.

I am a cripple in my limbs; but what decays are in my mind, the reader must determine. Dryden.

Among the rest there was a lame cripple from his birth, whom Paul commanded to stand upright on his feet. Bentley.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

To CRIPPLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To lame; to make lame; to deprive of the use of limbs.

Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryd.
Tettyx, the dancing-master, threw himself from the rock, but was crippled in the fall. Addison.

CRIPPLENESS. n. f. [from cripple.]
Lameness; privation of the limbs. Diä.

CRISIS. n. f. [κρίσις.]

1. The point in which the disease kills, or changes to the better; the decisive moment when sentence is passed.

Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude;
Deaf to complaints, they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. The point of time at which any affair comes to the height.

This hour's the very crisis of your fate
Your good or ill, your infamy or fame,
And all the colour of your life, depends
On this important now. Dryden.

The undertaking, which I am now laying down, was entered upon in the very crisis of the late rebellion, when it was the duty of every Briton to contribute his utmost assistance to the government, in a manner suitable to his station and abilities. Addison's Freeholder.

CRISP. adj. [crispus, Latin.]

1. Curled.

Bulls are more crisp on the forehead than cows. Bacon.

The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired. Hale.

2. Indented; winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,

With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless looks,

Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land

Answer your summons; Juno does command. Shakespeare.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors found-eth better; which may be by reason, not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp,
and so more porous and hollow. Bacon.

To CRISP. v. a. [crispo, Latin.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

Severn, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the tremoling reeds,
And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Young I'd have him too;

Yet a man with crisp'd hair,
Cast in thousand snares and rings,
For love's fingers, and his rings. Ben Jonson.
Spirit of wine is not only unfit for inflamma-tions in general, but also crisps up the vessels of the dura mater and brain, and sometimes produces a gangrene. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To twilt.

Along the crisp'd shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring. Milton.

3. To indent; to run in and out.

From that saphire fount the crisp'd brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
Ran nectar, visiting each plant. Milton.

CRISPATION. n. f. [from crisp.]

1. The act of curling.

2. The state of being curled.

Some differ in the hair and feathers, both in the quantity, crispation, and colours of them;
as he lions are hirsute, and have great manes;
the she's are smooth, like cats. Bacon.

CRISPING-PIN. n. f. [from crisp.] A curling iron.

The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Isaiah.

CRISPISULCANT. adj. [crispisulcans, Lat.] Waved, or undulating, as lightning is represented. Diä.

CRISPNESS. n. f. [from crisp.] Curled-ness.

CRISPY. adj. [from crisp.] Curled.

So are those crispy snaky locks, oft known
To be the dowry of a second head. Shakespeare.

CRITERION. n. f. [κρίτηριον.] A mark by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Mutual agreement and endearments was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary criterion. Glanville.

We have here a sure infallible criterion, by which every man may discover and find out the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart. South.

By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink? Pope's Horace.

CRITICK. n. f. [κριτικος.]

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature; a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks. Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,
For 'tis but half a judge's task to know. Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

3. A snarler; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place. Pope.

Where an author has many beauties consistent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature. Watts.

4. A censurer; a man apt to find fault.

My chief design, next to seeing you, is to be a severe critick on you and your neighbour. Swift.

CRITICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,
But critick learning flourish'd most in France. Pope.

CRITICK. n. f.

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine. Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the poetry of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal. Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logick and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with. Locke.

What is every year of a wise man's life, but a censure and critique on the past? Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd;
My verse gave ampler lessons to mankind. Pope.

To CRITICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

To play the critick; to criticize.

They do but trace over the paths that have been beaten by the ancients; or comment, critick, and flourish upon them. Temple.

CRITICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgment of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not. Holder.

Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs. Stillingfleet.

2. Relating to criticism: as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?—

—O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. Shakspeare.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days to be dependent on that number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Decisive; nice.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point, the critical minute, on which every good work so much depends. Spratt's Sermons.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside. Swift.

6. Producing a crisis or change of the disease: as, a critical sweat.

CRITICALLY. adv. [from critical.]

1. In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

Difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern good writers from bad, and a proper style from a corrupt one. Dryden.

These shells, which are digged up out of the earth, several hundred of which I now keep by me, have been nicely and critically examined by very many learned men. Woodward.

2. At the exact point of time.

CRITICALNESS. n. f. [from critical.]

Exactness; accuracy; nicety; incidence at a particular point of time.

To CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently. Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character;

Without all this at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise. Pope.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these accounts as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his expences. Locke.

To CRITICISE. v. a. To censure; to pass judgment upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of charity, to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person. Addison.

CRITICISM. n. f. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well. Dryden's Innocence, Preface.

2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick, who has not shewn, even in the style of his criticisms, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue. Addison.

To CROAK. v. n. [cpacezzan, Saxon; crocare, Italian; crocitare, Latin.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,
And querulous frogs in muddy pools do croak. May's Virgil.

So when Jove's block descended from on high,
Loud thunder to its bottom shook the bog,
And the hoarse nation croak'd. Pope.

Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British christians food;
And France robs marshes of the croaking brood. Gay.

2. To caw, or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakspeare.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow. Dryden.

At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, looks exceeding solemn and venerable. Addison.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to still the croaking of their own bellies. Locke.

CROAK. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skims the river's watry face;
The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race. Dryden.

Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?
No matter which, I'll to the grave and hide me. Lee.

CROCEOUS. adj. [croceus, Latin.] Consisting of saffron; like saffron. Diä.

CROCITATION. n. f. [crocitatio, Latin.] The croaking of frogs or ravens. Diä.

CROCK. n. f. [kruick, Dutch.] A cup; any vessel made of earth.

CROCKERY. n. f. Earthen ware.

CROCODILE. n. f. [from κρόκος, saffron, and δελφιν, fearing.] An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced; except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. It runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, near the water-side, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may hatch them. Calmet.

Gloster's show

Beguiles him; as the mournful crocodile

With sorrow snares relenting passengers. Shaksp.

Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep. Dryd.

Enticing crocodiles, whose tears are death;

Syrens, that murder with enchanting breath. Granville.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called stinix, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile. It lives by land and water; has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tail. It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with brown, and of a gold colour upon the back. It always remains little. Trevoux.

CROCODILINE. adj. [crocodilinus, Lat.]

Like a crocodile. Diä.

CROCUS. n. f. A flower.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace,
Throws out the snow-drop and the crocus first. Thomson.

CROFT. n. f. [cnoft, Saxon.] A little close joining to a house, that is used for corn or pasture.

This have I learn'd,

Tending my flocks hard by, i' th' hilly crofts

That brow this bottom glade. Milton.

CROISA'DE. } n. f. [croisade, Fr. from

CROISA'DO. } croix, a cross.] A holy war; a war carried on against infidels under the banner of the cross.

See that he take the name of Urban, because a pope of that name did first institute the croisade; and, as with an holy trumpet, did stir up the voyage for the Holy Land. Bacon.

CROISES. n. f.

1. Pilgrims who carry a cross.
2. Soldiers who fight against infidels under the banner of the cross.

CRONE. n. f. [cnone, Sax. according to Verstegan; kronie, Dutch, according to Skinner.]

1. An old ewe.

Fresh herrings plenty Michel brings,
With fatted crones, and such old things. Tusser.

2. In contempt, an old woman.

Take up the bastard,

Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone. Shaksp.

The crone being in bed with him on the wedding night, and finding his aversion, endeavours to win his affection by reason. Dryden.

CRO'NET. n. f. The hair which grows over the top of a horse's hoof.

CRO'NY. n. f. [a cant word.] An old acquaintance; a companion of long standing.

So when the Scots, your constant cronies,

Th' espousers of your cause and monies. Hudib.

To oblige your crony Swift,

Bring our dame a new year's gift. Swift.

Strange, an astrologer should die

Without one wonder in the sky!

Not one of all his crony stars

To pay their duty at his herse! Swift.

CROOK. n. f. [croc, French.]

1. Any crooked or bent instrument.
2. A sheephook.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore
In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.

He left his crook, he left his flocks,
And wand'ring through the lonely rocks,
He nourish'd endless woe. Prior.

3. Any thing bent; a meander.

There fall those sapphire-colour'd brooks,
Which, conduit-like, with curious crooks,
Sweet islands make in that sweet land. Sidney.

To CROOK. v. a. [crocher, French.]

1. To bend; to turn into a hook.

It is highly probable, that this disease proceeds from a redundant acidity, because vinegar will soften and crook tender bones. Arbutnot.

2. To pervert from rectitude; to divert from the original end.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Bacon.

To CROOK. v. n. To be bent; to have a curvature.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upwards. Camden.

CRO'OKBACK. n. f. [crook and back.] A term of reproach for a man that has gibbous shoulders.

Aye, crookback, here I stand to answer thee,
Or any he the proudest of thy sort. Shakspeare.

CRO'OKBACKED. adj. Having bent shoulders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,
As negroe for a swan; a crookback'd lass
Be call'd Europa. Dryden's Juvenal.

There are millions of truths that a man is not, or may not think himself, concerned to know; as, whether our king Richard III. was crookbacked or no. Locke.

CRO'OKED. adj. [crocher, French.]

1. Bent; not straight; curved.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the light of the sounding body; and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes, as through straight ones.
Newton's Opticks.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the obliquity of a crooked one. Woodward.

2. Winding; oblique; anfractuous.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow.
Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem. Thomson.

3. Perverse; untoward; without rectitude of mind; given to obliquity of conduct.

They have corrupted themselves: they are a perverse and crooked generation. Deut.

Hence, heap of wrath; foul, indigested lump!
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakspeare.

We were not born crooked; we learned those windings and turnings of the serpent. South.

CRO'OKEDLY. adv. [from crooked.]

1. Not in a straight line.

2. Untowardly; not compliantly.

If we walk perversely with God, he will walk
crookedly towards us. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

CRO'OKEDNESS. n. f. [from crooked.]

1. Deviation from straightness; curvity;
the state of being inflected; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hooker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any un-cleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

CROP. n. f. [cnop, Saxon.] The craw of a bird; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray.

But fluttering there, they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known.

Dryden.

CROP. n. f. [cnoppa, Saxon.]

1. The highest part or end of any thing:
as the head of a tree, the ear of corn.

2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,
Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care.

Spenser.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds,
Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow.

Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guileless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryd.

To CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing; to mow; to reap; to lop.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat, one half is cut away. Shakspeare.

He, upon whose side

The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion. Shakspeare.

All the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. Shakspeare.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain. Ezek.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeeth upon their beards. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme!

Dryden.

2. To gather before it falls.

O fruit divine!

Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropp'd. Milton.

Age, like ripe apples, on earth's bosom drops;
While force our youth, like fruits, untimely crops.

Denham.

Death destroys

The parent's hopes, and crops the growing boys.

Grech.

To CROP. v. n. To yield harvest.

Royal wench!

She made great Cæsar lay his sword to-bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropt. Shakspeare.

CRO'PPFUL. adj. [crop and full.] Satiated;
having a full belly.

He, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength;

And crop-full, out of door he flings

Ere the first cock his matin rings.

Milton.

CRO'PPER. n. f. [from crop.] A kind of pigeon with a large crop.

There be tame and wild pigeons; and of tame there be croppers, carriers, runts. Walton.

CRO'PSICK. adj. [crop and sick.] Sick with repletion; sick with excess and debauchery.

Strange odds! where crop-sick drunkards must engage

A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage.

Tate's Juvenal.

CRO'SIER. n. f. [croiser, Fr. from croix, a cross.] The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them; as in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their crostiers, did almost try it with the king's sword. Bacon.

Grievances there were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government;
wherein some say the crostier, some say the distaff, was too busy. Howel.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The crostier wielded, and the mitre wore. Dryd.

CRO'SLET. n. f. [croisset, French.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,
Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,
That in his armour bare a crostlet red. Spenser.

Here an unfinish'd diamond crostlet lay,
To which soft lovers adoration pay. Gay.

2. It seems to be printed in the following passage, by mistake, for corselet.

The crostlet some, and some the cuisses mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryd.

CROSS. n. f. [croix, Fr. croce, Ital. crux,
Latin.]

1. One straight body laid at right angles over another; the instrument by which the Saviour of the world suffered death.

They make a little cross of a quill, longways of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crossways of that piece of the quill without pith. Bacon's Natural History.

You are first to consider seriously the infinite love of your Saviour, who offered himself for you as a sacrifice upon the cross. Taylor.

2. The ensign of the christian religion.

Her holy faith and christian cross oppos'd Against the Saxon gods. Rowe.

By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays.

Shakspeare.

4. A line drawn through another.

5. Any thing that thwarts or obstructs; misfortune; hinderance; vexation; opposition; misadventure; trial of patience.

Wishing unto me many crosses and mischances in my love, whensoever I should love. Sidney.

Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross. Shakspeare.

Heaven prepares good men with crosses; but no ill can happen to a good man. Ben Jonson.

A great estate hath great crosses, and a mean fortune hath but small ones. Taylor.

6. Money, so called because marked with a cross.

He was said to make soldiers spring up out of the very earth to follow him, though he had not a cross to pay them salary. Howel.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carried back nor brought one cross!

Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect boys-play; cross, I win, and pile, you lose; or, what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own.

Swift.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges, so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the cross; wherein the king made a sheriff: so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the cross. Sir J. Davies.

CROSS. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Transverse; falling athwart something else.

Whatsoever penumbra should be made in the circles by the cross refraction of the second prism, that penumbra would be conspicuous in the right lines which touch those circles. Newton.

The sun, in that space of time, by his annual contrary motion eastward, will be advanced near a degree of the ecliptick, cross to the motion of the equator. Holder on Time.

The ships must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones. Bentley.

2. Oblique; lateral.

Was this a face,
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick cross lightning? Shakspeare.

3. Adverse; opposite: often with to.

We're both love's captives; but with fate so cross,

One must be happy by the other's loss. Dryden.

Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain. Dryden.

It runs cross to the belief and apprehension of the rest of mankind; a difficulty which a modest and good man is scarce able to encounter. Atterb.

4. Perverse; untractable.

When, through the cross circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience, then religion bids him quit it. South.

5. Peevish; fretful; ill-humoured.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress? Taylor.

All cross and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, must be shunned. Tillotson.

6. Contrary; contradictory.

The mind brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with, and depends upon, another; and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties and contradictions, that seemed to lie cross and uncouth, and to make the whole unintelligible. South.

7. Contrary to wish; unfortunate.

We learn the great reasonableness of not only a contented, but also a thankful, acquiescence in any condition, and under the *cross*est and severest passages of Providence. South.

I cannot, without some regret, behold the cross and unlucky issue of my design; for, by my dislike of disputes, I am engaged in one. Glanville.

8. Interchanged.

Evarchus made a cross marriage also with Dorilaus's sister, and shortly left her with child of the famous Pyrocles. Sidney.

Cross marriages, between the king's son and the archduke's daughter; and again, between the archduke's son and the king's daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.

CROSS. prep.

1. Athwart; so as to intersect any thing; transversely.

The enemy had, in the woods before them, cut down great trees cross the ways, so that their horse could not possibly pass that way. Knolles.

Between the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats of human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway
Dryden's Virgil.

Cross his back, as in triumphant scorn,
The hope and pillar of the house was born. Dryd.

2. Over; from side to side.

A fox was taking a walk one night cross a village. L'Estrange.

To CROSS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lay one body, or draw one line, athwart another.

This forc'd the stubborn'st, for the cause,
To cross the cudgels to the laws;
That what by breaking them 't had gain'd,
By their support might be maintain'd. Hudibras.

The loxia, or cross-bill, whose bill is thick and strong, with the tips crossing one another, with great readiness breaks open fir-cones, apples, and other fruit, to come at their kernels; as if the crossing of the bill was designed for this service. Derham's Physico-Theology.

I shall most carefully observe, not to cross over or deface the copy of your papers for the future, and only to mark in the margin. Pope.

A hunted hare treads back her mazes, and crosses and confounds her former track. Watts.

2. To sign with the cross.

Friars
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exercise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryd.

3. To cancel: as, to cross an article.

4. To pass over.

He conquered this proud Turk as far as the Hellespont, which he crossed, and made a visit to the Greek emperor at Constantinople. Temple.

We found the hero, for whose only sake
We fought the dark abodes, and cross'd the bitter lake. Dryden.

5. To move laterally, obliquely, or athwart; not in opposition; not in the same line.

But he them spying, 'gan to turn aside,
For fear, as seem'd, or for some feined loss;
More greedy they of news, fast towards him do cross. Spenser.

6. To thwart; to interpose obstruction; to embarrass; to obstruct; to hinder; to counteract.

Still do I cross this wretch, whatso he taketh in hand. Hooker.

The king no longer could endure
Thus to be cross'd in what he did intend. Daniel.

He was so great an enemy to Digby and Colpeper, who were only present in debates of the war with the officers, that he crossed all they proposed. Clarendon.

Buried in private, and so suddenly!
It crosses my design, which was t' allow
The rites of funeral fitting his degree. Dryden.

Swell'd with our late successes on the foe,
Which France and Holland wanted pow'r to cross,
We urge an unseen fate. Dryden.

The firm patriot there,
Though still by faction, vice, and fortune cross'd,
Shall find the generous labour was not lost. Addison's Cato.

7. To counteract; to be inconsistent with.

Then their wills clash with their understandings, and their appetites cross their duty. Locke.

8. To contravene; to hinder by authority; to countermand.

No governor is suffered to go on with any one course, but upon the least information he is either stopped and crossed, or other courses appointed him from hence. Spenser on Ireland.

It may make my case dangerous, to cross this in the smallest. Shakspeare.

9. To contradict.

In all this there is not a syllable which any ways crosseth us. Hooker.

It is certain, howsoever it cross the received opinion, that sounds may be created without air. Bacon's Natural History.

10. To debar; to preclude.

From his loins no hopeful branch shall spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for. Shakspeare.

To CROSS. v. n.

1. To lie athwart another thing.
2. To be inconsistent.

Men's actions do not always cross with reason. Sidney.

CROSS-BAR-SHOT. n. f. A round shot, or great bullet, with a bar of iron put through it. Harris.

To CROSS-EXAMINE. v. a. [cross and examine.] To try the faith of evidence by captious questions of the contrary party.

If we may but cross-examine and interrogate their actions against their words, these will soon confess the invalidity of their solemnest confessions. Decay of Piety.

The judges shall, as they think fit, interrogate or cross-examine the witnesses. Spectator.

CROSS-STAFF. n. f. [from cross and staff.] An instrument commonly called the forestaff, used by seamen to take the meridian altitude of the sun or stars. Harris.

CROSSBITE. n. f. [cross and bite.] A deception; a cheat.

The fox, that trusted to his address and manage, without so much as dreaming of a cross-bite from so silly an animal, fell himself into the pit that he had digged for another. L'Estrange.

To CROSSBITE. v. a. [from the noun.] To contravene by deception.

No rhetoric must be spent against cross-biting a country evidence, and fighting him out of his senses. Collier.

That many knotty points there are,
Which all discuss, but few can clear;
As nature slyly had thought fit,
For some by-ends, to cross-bite wit. Prior.

CROSSBOW. n. f. [cross and bow.] A missile weapon, formed by placing a bow athwart a stock.

Gentlemen suffer their beasts to run wild in their woods and waste ground, where they are hunted and killed with cross-bows and pieces, in the manner of deer. Carew of Cornwall.

The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures. Shakspeare.

Testimony is like the shot of a long bow, which owes its efficacy to the force of the shooter; argument is like the shot of the cross-bow, equally forcible whether discharged by a giant or a dwarf. Boyle.

CROSSBOWER. n. f. [from crossbow.] A shooter with a crossbow.

The French assisted themselves by land with the cross-bowers of Genoa against the English. Raleigh's Essays.

CROSSGRAINED. adj. [cross and grain.]

If the stuff proves crossgrained in any part of its length, then you must turn your stuff to plane it the contrary way, so far as it runs crossgrained. Moxon.

2. Perverse; troublesome; vexatious.

We find in sullen wits,
And cross-grain'd works of modern wits,
The wonder of the ignorant. Hudibras.

The spirit of contradiction, in a cross-grained woman, is incurable. L'Estrange.

She was none of your cross-grained, termagant, scolding jades, that one had as good be hanged as live in the house with. Arbuthnot.

But wisdom, peevish and cross-grain'd,
Must be oppos'd, to be sustain'd. Prior.

CROSSLY. adv. [from cross.]

1. Athwart; so as to intersect something else.

2. Oppositely; adversely; in opposition to.

He that provides for this life, but takes no care for eternity, is wise for a moment, but a fool for ever; and acts as untowardly and crossly to the reason of things, as can be imagined.

Filletson.

3. Unfortunately.

CROSSNESS. n. f. [from cross.]

1. Transverseness; intersection.

2. Perverseness; peevishness.

The lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness or aptness to oppose; but the deeper sort, to envy, or mere mischief.

Bacon.

I deny nothing, fit to be granted, out of crossness or humour.

King Charles.

Who would have imagined that the stiff crossness of a poor captive should ever have had the power to make Haman's seat so uneasy to him?

L'Estrange.

They help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and our passions, and lay our disappointments asleep.

Cellier.

CROSSROW. n. f. [cross and row.] Alphabet; so named because a cross is placed at the beginning, to show that the end of learning is piety.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams, And from the crossrow plucks the letter G; And says a wizard told him, that by G His issue disinherited should be.

Shakspeare.

CROSSWIND. n. f. [cross and wind.]

Wind blowing from the right or left.

The least unhappy persons do, in so fickle and so tempestuous a sea as this world, meet with many more either crosswinds or stormy gusts than prosperous gales.

Farrier's Dict.

CROW. n. f. [cræpe, Saxon; corvus, Latin.]

1. A large black bird that feeds upon the carcases of beasts.

The crow and choughs, that wing the midway air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles.

Shakspeare.

To crow he like impartial grace affords,

And choughs and daws, and such republick birds.

Dryden.

2. To pluck a CROW, is to be industrious or contentious about that which is of no value.

If you dispute, we must even pluck a crow about it.

L'Estrange.

Resolve, before we go,

That you and I must pull a crow.

Hudibras.

3. A bar of iron, with a beak, used as a lever to force open doors; as the Latins called a hook corvus.

The crow is used as a lever to lift up the ends of great heavy timber, and then they thrust the claws between the ground and the timber; and laying some stuff behind the crow, they draw the other end of the shank backwards, and so raise the timber.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight

Unto my cell.

Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Against the gate employ your *crow*s of iron.

Southern.

Grandison.

CROWD. n. f. [crud, Saxon.]

1. A multitude confusedly pressed together.

2. A promiscuous medley, without order or distinction.

He could then compare the confusion of a multitude to that tumult he had observed in the Icarian sea, dashing and breaking among its crowd of islands.

Pope.

3. The vulgar; the populace.

He went not with the crowd to see a shrine, But fed us by the way with food divine.

Dryden.

4. [from crwth, Welsh.] A fiddle.

Hark how the minstrels' gin to shrill aloud Their merry musick that rebounds from far, The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd, That well agree withouten breach or jar.

Spenser.

His fiddle is your proper purchase,

Won in the service of the churches;

And by your doom must be allow'd

To be, or be no more, a crowd.

Hudibras.

To CROWD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill with confused multitudes.

A mind which is ever crowding its memory with things which it learns, may cramp the invention itself.

Watts.

2. To press close together.

The time misorder'd, doth in common sense Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form, To hold our safety up.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

It seems probable that the sea doth still grow narrower from age to age, and sinks more within its channel and the bowels of the earth, according as it can make its way into all those subterraneous cavities, and crowd the air out of them.

Burnet's Theory.

As the mind itself is thought to take up no space, so its actions seem to require no time; but many of them seem to be crowded into an instant.

Locke.

Then let us fill

This little interval, this pause of life,

With all the virtues we can crowd into it.

Addison's Cato.

3. To incumber by multitudes.

Shakspeare.

CROWN. n. f. [couronne, Fr. kroone, Dutch; corona, Latin.]

1. The ornament of the head which denotes imperial and regal dignity.

If thou be a king, where is thy crown? —

—My crown is in my heart, not on my head:
My crown is call'd content;

A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy. Shakspeare.

Look down, you gods,
And on this couple drop a blessed crown. Shakspeare.

I would the college of the cardinals

Would chuse him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head. Shakspeare.

Is it not as great a presumption in us to become God's sons; and to inherit kingdoms, and to hope for crowns, and thrones, and sceptres,

as it is to sit down with him as his guests?
Kettlewell.

2. A garland.

Receive a crown for thy well ordering of the feast.
Ecclus.

3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die. Dryden.

These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock. Addison.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.

5. Proclamation.

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.

The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again. Shaks.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.

9. Importunate call.

Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jeremiah.

10. Yelping of dogs.

He scorns the dog, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He strait resumes his wonted care. Waller.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills. Zephaniah.

12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd. Milt.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
As reek o' th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead carcases of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

CRYAL. n. f. The heron. Ainsworth.

CRYER. See CRIER.

CRYER. n. f. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift. *Ainsworth.*CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτός.] Hid-CRYPTICK. } den; secret; occult;
private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes. Glanville's Apol.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.]

Occultly; secretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense without cryptically distinguishing it from those favors that are a-kin to it. Boyle.

CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτός and γραφή.]

1. The art of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTOLOGY. n. f. [κρυπτός and λόγος.]

Enigmatical language.

CRYSTAL. n. f. [κρύσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstria, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.

Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on optics, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in fillicidia. Bacon.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same. Woodward.

2. Crystal is also used for a factitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. *Chambers.*3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRYSTAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy crystal window ope, look out. Shakspeare.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds, By crystal streams that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shakspeare.
We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides, the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them. Bacon's Natural History.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
On the crystalline sky, in saphir thron'd. Milton.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystallize.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified,
according to the nature and texture of the salts.
The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fated enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their flatness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodw.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear. Shakspeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakspeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,
One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakspeare.

O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. DiA.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. DiA.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from κῦβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Grew.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromattick smell, and is acrid to the taste. Cubebs are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromaticks, as cubebs, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]
CUBICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wilkins's Mathematical Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubiculary beds into discubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holder on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbutnot.

When on the goddess's first I cast my sight, Scarce seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that unto men below they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Cowell.

These mounted on a chair-curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, French, from coukoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't. Shakspeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in 's absence. Shakspeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryd.
Ever since the reign of king Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakspeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not:
yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.]

One that makes a practice of corrupting wives

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakspeare.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cucucu, Welsh; cocu, French; cokkock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulterer, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

C U D

Finding Mopla, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of spring, His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plainfong cuckoo gray, Whose note full many a man doth mark, And dares not answer, nay. Shakspeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night: Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakspeare.

I deduce, From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings, The symphony of spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Thomson.

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running!—A-horseback, ye cuckoo;—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakspeare.

CUCKOO-BUD. } n. f. [cardaminus,
CUCKOO-FLOWER. } Latin.] The name of a flower.

When daizies pied, and violets blue, And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue, Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakspeare.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodfare, is that spumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCULLATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded,
CUCULLATED. } Latin.]

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cucullated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown's Vulg. Er.

CUCUMBER. n. f. [cucumis, Lat.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina: others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep, With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden's Virgil.

CUCURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Latin, a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon. Chambers.

CUCURBITE. n. f. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glass head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUD. n. f. [cud, Saxon.] That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

C U E

You range the pathless wood, While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryd.

CUD'DEN. } n. f. [without etymology.]
CUD'DY. } A clown; a stupid rustick; a low dolt: a low bad word.

The slaving cudden, propp'd upon his staff, Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryd.

TO CUD'DLE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake, Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh? She cuddles low behind the brake; Nor would she stay, nor dare she fly. Prior.

CUDGEL. n. f. [kudse, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.

Do not provoke the rage of stones And cudgels to thy hide and bones: Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His furly officer ne'er fail'd to crack His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel playing. Arbutnot.

2. To cross the CUDGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

TO CUD'GEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life; Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff, And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CUD'DLE. n. f. A small sea fish.

Of round fish there are britt, sprat, cudles, eels. Carew.

CUDWEED. n. f. [from cud and weed.] A plant. Miller.

CUE. n. f. [queue, a tail, French.]

1. The tail or end of any thing: as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakspeare.

C U F

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba, That he should weep for her? What would he do, Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakspeare.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands, Both you of my inclining, and the rest: Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it. Without a prompter. Shakspeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUERPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cuervo, is to be without the upper coat, or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cuervo or body.

Expos'd in cuervo to their rage, Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. n. f. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare, to fight, Italian.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book, And as he stoop'd again to take it up, The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff, That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakspeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakspeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbutnot.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

TO CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping farces acted by the court, While the peers cuff to make the rabble sport. Dryden's Juvenal.

TO CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him. — Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shakspeare.

Were not you my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,

Sit only watchful with their heavy wings To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Otway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring, Who safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,

And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

Hov'ring about the coasts, they make their moan,

And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden's Aeneid.

CUFF. n. f. [coiffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He railed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbuthnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. f. [from cui.] The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places. Corwell.

CUI'RASS. n. f. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dint. Dryd.

CUIRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a soldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUISH. n. f. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cushes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

The crocket some, and some the cushes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Æneid.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cushes to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CULDEES. n. f. [colidei, Lat.] Monks in Scotlands.

CULERAGE. n. f. The same plant with arfe-smart. Ainsworth.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbuthnot.

TO CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shaksp.

Like the bee culling from ev'ry flow'r,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shakspeare.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shaksp.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted. Howel.

When false flow'rs of rhetoric thou would'st cull,
Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his herd he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls. Dryden's Virgil.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various off'rings of the world appear:
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glitt'ring spoil. Pope.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooses.

CULLION. n. f. [coglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion.] It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakspeare.

Up to the breach, you dogs; avaunt; you cullions. Shakspeare.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines. Spenser.

CULLY. n. f. [coglione, Ital. a fool.]

A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:
They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbuthnot.

TO CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To be fool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive;

to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus, and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbuthnot.

TO CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.]

To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,

Than from true evidence of good esteem
He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shaksp.

2. Guilty: with of.

These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Ire.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; forasmuch as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.]

Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. f. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit,

God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il paroit, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow lees
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery. Shaksp.

TO CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

2. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

A whole cannon requires, for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds. Wilkins' Math. Magic.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:
No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,
But 'tis already more than half the mall;
And such a fury from his arm 't has got,
As from a smoking culverin 'twere shot. Waller.

CULVERKEY. n. f. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

To CUMBER. v. a. [kommeren, komberen, to disturb, Dutch.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd?
You give him death that intercept his haste. Dryden's Fables.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To crowd or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Shakespeare's Timon.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers the memory to no purpose. Locke.

To cureless ruin. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

If, said he,
Your grief alone is hard captivity,
For love of heav'n, with patience undergo
A cureless ill, since fate will have it so. Dryden.

CURER. n. f. [from cure.] A healer;
a physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakspeare.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our consumption curers, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

CURFEW. n. f. [couvre feu, French.]

1. An evening-peal, by which the Con-querer willed that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places, at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bedtime, it is said to ring curfew. Cowell.

You, whose pastime
Is to make midnight mulhrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Oft on a plat of rising ground
I hear the far off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with fullen roar. Milton.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplate.

But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters, and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass.

Bacon.

Watts.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death.

Addison.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken: that is a man's intrinsic, this his current, value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Of leaving what is natural and fit, The current folly proves our ready wit; And authors think their reputation safe, Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.

Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Shaks.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course: as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides, Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But his fair course is not hindered; He makes sweet musick with th' enamell'd stones.

Shakspeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide.

Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast, Whose farae in thine, like lesser current, 's lost; Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes, To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods.

Denham.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays, While through the sky his shining current strays.

Pope.

2. In navigation.

Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship.

Harris.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invested by Pheidias the Lacedemonian insidiously; which drew on a surprize of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war, even into the walls of Sparta.

Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand.

Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. f. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

Camden's Remains.

CURRIER. n. f. [coriarius, Latin.] One who dresses and pares leather for those that make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bear-skin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it.

L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground; For usele's to the currier were their hides, Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides Be freed from filth.

Dryden's Virgil.

CURRISH. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; four; quarrellsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking oft a currish heart reclaims.

Sidney.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason, Did thenceforth ever enter in his mind, But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. In fashions wayward, and in love unkind; For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind.

Fairfax.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew.

Shakspeare.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Shakspeare.

TO CURRY. v. a. [corium, leather, Latin.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

2. To beat; to drub; to thrash; to chastise.

A deep design in 't to divide

Addison.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full; as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts.

Bacon.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow.

Shakspeare.

5. TO CURRY FAVOUR. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery.

He judg'd them still over-ably to fawn upon the heathens, and to curry favour with infidels.

Hooker.

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself.

L'Estrange.

CURRYCOMB. n. f. [from curry and comb.]

An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of strigil and fistrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamp'd in the margin small pictures of these instruments.

Locke.

TO CURSE. v. a. [Cyprian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me.

Numbers.

After Solyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast into the sea.

Knolles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me:

This imprecation was for Laius' death, And thou hast wished me like him.

Dryden and Lee.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose

Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those.

Pope.

CURSITOR. n. f. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves.

Cowell.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the curfitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment.

Bacon.

CURSORARY. adj. [from curfus, Latin.] Curfory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a curfory eye

O'erglanc'd the articles. Shakspeare's Henry v.

CURSORILY. adv. [from curfory.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but curforyly must needs see.

Atterbury.

CURSORINESS. n. f. [from curfory.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. adj. [from curforius, Latin.] Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

The first, upon a curfory and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison.

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties; pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. Proverbs.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewishness; I am a right maid, for my cowardice; let her not strike me.

Shakspeare.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry.

Shaks.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough, is, that she is intolerably curst,

And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure, that, were my state far worse than it is, I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

Shaks.

When I dissuaded him from his intent, and found him pight to do it with curst speech, I threaten'd to discover him.

Shakspeare.

And though his mind

Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind.

Crashaw.

CURSTNESS. n. f. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,

Touch you the fourest points with sweetest terms, Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Shakspeare.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown; Her fallow cheeks her envious mind did shew, And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew.

Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

To CURTAIL. v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion, Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time Into this breathing world,

Shakspeare.

CUR

Then why should we ourselves abridge, And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.
Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice.

Woodward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables.

Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact, but Faction.

Addison.

CURTAL Dog. n. f. A dog lawed, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn i' th' wheel.

Shakspeare's Comedy of Errors.

CURTAIN. n. f. [cortina, Latin.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air.

Arbutnot on Diet.

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous ray, And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day.

Pope.

Thy hand, great Dulness! lets the curtain fall, And universal darkness buries all.

Pope.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it, so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense.

Burnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night.

Pope.

3. To open it, so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-cheering sun Should in the farthest east begin to draw The shady curtain from Aurora's bed.

Shaks.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on, Till this stormy night be gone; And th' eternal morrow dawn, Then the curtain will be drawn.

Crashaw.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions.

Military Dict.

The governour, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers.

Knolles.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. f. [from curtain and lecture.] A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred! The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed.

Dryden's Juvenal.

She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and, if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him.

Addison.

To CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse The curtain'd sleep.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CUS

The wand'ring prince and Dido, When with a happy storm they were surpris'd, And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave.

Shakspeare.

But, in her temple's last recess inclos'd, On Dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd: Him close she curtain'd round with vapours blue, And soft besprinkled with cimmerian dew.

Pope.

CURTELAX. }

CURTSY. See COURTESY.

CURVATED. adj. [curvatus, Lat.] Bent; crooked.

CURVATION. n. f. [curvo, Latin.] The act of bending or crooking.

CURVATURE. n. f. [from curve.] Crookedness; inflexion; manner of bending.

It is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow.

Cheyne.

Flaccid it was beyond the activity of the muscle, and curvature of the ossicles, to give it a due tension.

Holder.

CURVE. adj. [curvus, Latin.] Crooked; bent; inflected; not straight.

Unless an intrinsic principle of gravity or attraction may make it describe a curve line about the attracting body.

Bentley.

CURVE. n. f. Any thing bent; a flexure or crookedness of any particular form.

And as you lead it round, in artful curve, With eye intente mark the springing game.

Thomson.

To CURVE. v. a. [curvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook; to inflect.

And the tongue is drawn back and curved.

Holder.

To CURVE'T. v. n. [corvettare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to bound.

Cry holla! to thy tongue, I pry'thee: it curve'ts unseasonably.

Shakspeare.

Himself he on an earwig set, Yet scarce he on his back could get, So oft and high he did curve't,

Ere he himself could settle.

Drayton.

Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpris'd with fright,

The wounded steed curve'ts; and, rais'd upright, Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind.

Dryden's Entid.

CURVILI'NEAR. adj. [curvus and linea, Latin.]

1. Consisting of a crooked line.

The impulse continually draws the celestial body from its rectilinear motion, and forces it into a curvilinear orbit; so that it must be repeated every minute of time.

Cheyne.

2. Composed of crooked lines.

CURVITY. n. f. [from curve.] Crookedness.

The joined ends of that bone and the incus receding, make a more acute angle at that joint, and give a greater curvity to the posture of the ossicles.

Holder on Speech.

CUSHION. n. f. [kussen, Dutch; coussin, French.] A pillow for the seat; a soft pad placed upon a chair.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.
Shakspeare.

If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. Shakspeare.

But, ere they sat, officious Baucis lays
Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise;
Coarse, but the best she had. Dryden's Fables.

An eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence; and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal, for the son to sit on. Swift.

CUSHIONED. adj. [from cushion.] Seated on a cushion; supported by cushions.

Many, who are cushioned upon thrones, would have remained in obscurity. Dissert. on Parties.

kind of sweetmeat made by boiling eggs with milk and sugar till the whole thickens into a mass. It is a food much used in city feasts.

He cram'd them, till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plumb-cake. Hudib.

Now may'rs and thieves all hush'd and fatiate lay;

Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

CUSTODY. n. f. [custodia, Latin.]

1. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstrated unto queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advised her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody. Bacon.

For thus enslav'd, is custody severe,
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment Inflicted? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Care; guardianship; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Marari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle.

Numbers.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody? Shak.

An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody. Knolles.

There is generally but one coin stamp'd upon the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it; by this means the whole frame is in his own custody. Addison.

3. Defence; preservation; security.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas. Bacon.

CUSTOM. n. f. [coustume, French.]

1. Habit; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war;
All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds. Shakf.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship. Locke.

2. Fashion; common way of acting.

And the priest's custom with the people was,
that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hands.

1 Samuel.

3. Established manner.

According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord. Luke.

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You say he is assiduous in his calling, and is he not grown rich by it? Let him have your custom, but not your votes. Addison.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.]

A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town.
Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowell.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfei-tures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts.

Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs in England. Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,
That 'tis their charter to defraud their king.

Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade. Arbuthnot.

CUSTOMHOUSE. n. f. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some customhouse officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thrifty squires, are the only thriving people amongst us. Swift.

CUSTOMABLE. adj. [from custom.] Common; habitual; frequent.

CUSTOMABLY. adv. [from customable.]
According to custom.

Kingdoms have customably been carried away by right of succession, according to proximity of blood. Hayward.

CUSTOMARILY. adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye, perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without confi-deration, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him. Ray.

CUSTOMARINESS. n. f. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice which for its guilt may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness the frequentest, investives which can be made against it.

Government of the Tongue.

CUSTOMARY. adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom;
according to prescription.

Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul: I have here the customary gown. Shakspeare.

Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief. Glennville.

2. Habitual.

We should avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing; and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it. Tillotson.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him

With customary compliment, when he,
Wasting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.

Shakspeare.

CUSTOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; that to which we are accustomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.

Shakspeare.

CUSTOMER. n. f. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale:
for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers. Shakspeare.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire
A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do
To persuade customers to buy their goods.

Recommon.

Lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop: Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day? Arbuthnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement.

Swift.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her!—What, a customer? Pr'ythee bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Shakspeare's Othello.

CUSTREL. n. f.

1. A buckler-bearer.

2. A vessel for holding wine. Ainsworth.

CUT. pret. cut; part. pass. cut. [probably from the French couteau, a knife.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,

That my great heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swoon with this dead killing news.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,

The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And severs 'em for ever. Dryden.

Some I have cut away with scissars. Wifeman.

2. To hew.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon. 2 Chronicles.

3. To carve; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster? Shakf.

The triumphal is defaced by time; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building. Addison.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into thin plates,
and cut it into wires. Exodus.

5. To divide by passing through.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,

And reach Geresus at the point of day. Pope.

6. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.

The man was cut to the heart with these consolations. Addison.

7. To divide packs of cards.
Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human elves,
To cut and shuffle for our ourselves. Prior.
We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.
Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving,
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving. Granville.
8. To intersect; to cross: as, one line cuts another at right angles.
9. To CUT down. To fell; to hew down.
All the timber whereof was cut down in the mountains of Cilicia. Knolles.
10. To CUT down. To excel; to overpower: a low phrase.
So great is his natural eloquence, that he cuts down the finest orator, and destroys the best contrived argument, as soon as ever he gets himself to be heard. Addison's Count Tariff.
11. To CUT off. To separate from the other parts by cutting.
And they caught him, and cut off his thumbs. Judges.
12. To CUT off. To destroy; to extirpate; to put to death untimely.
All Spain was first conquered by the Romans, and filled with colonies from them, which were still increased, and the native Spaniards still cut off. Spenser on Ireland.
Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp. Macbeth.
This great commander was suddenly cut off by a fatal stroke, given him with a small contemptible instrument. Howel.
Irenæus was likewise cut off by martyrdom. Addison.
Ill-fated prince! too negligent of life!
Cut off in the fresh ripening prime of manhood,
Even in the pride of life. Philips.
13. To CUT off. To rescind; to separate; to take away.
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shaksp.
He that cuts off twenty years of life,
Cuts off so many years of fearing death. Shaksp.
Presume not on thy God, whoe'er he be:
Thee he regards not, owns not, hath cut off
Quite from his people. Milton's Agonistes.
The proposal of a recompence from men, cuts off the hopes of future rewards. Smalridge.
14. To CUT off. To intercept; to hinder from union or return.
The king of this island, a wise man and a great warrior, handled the matter so, as he cut off their land forces from their ships. Bacon.
His party was so much inferior to the enemy,
that it would infallibly be cut off. Clarendon.
15. To CUT off. To put an end to; to obviate.
To cut off contentions, commissioners were appointed to make certain the limits. Hayward.

off frequent occasions of brutal rage and intemperance. Addison.
16. To CUT off. To withhold.
We are concerned to cut off all occasion from those who seek occasion, that they may have whereof to accuse us. Rogers.
17. To CUT off. To preclude.
Every one who lives in the practice of any voluntary sin, actually cuts himself off from the benefits and profession of christianity. Addison.
This only object of my real care,
Cut off from hope, abandon'd to despair,

- In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd From wealth, from pow'r, from love, and from the world. Prior.
Why should those who wait at altars be cut off from partaking in the general benefits of law, or of nature? Swift.
18. To CUT off. To interrupt; to silence.
It is no grace to a judge to shew quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short. Bacon.
19. To CUT off. To apostrophise; to abbreviate.
No vowel can be cut off before another, when we cannot sink the pronunciation of it. Dryden.
20. To CUT out. To shape; to form.
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out
The purity of his. Shakspere.
I, for my part, do not like images cut out in juniper, or other garden stuff: they be for children. Bacon.
There is a large table at Montmorancy cut out of the thickness of a vine stock. Temple.
The antiquaries being but indifferent taylors, they wrangle prodigiously about the cutting out the toga. Arbutnot on Coins.

strument: distinguished from that made by perforation with a pointed instrument.
3. A wound made by cutting.
Sharp weapons, according to the force, cut into the bone many ways; which cuts are called sedes, and are reckoned among the fractures. Wifeman's Surgery.
4. A channel made by art.
This great cut or ditch Sesostris the rich king of Egypt, and long after him Ptolomeus Phila-delphus, purposed to have made a great deal wider and deeper, and thereby to have let the Red Sea into the Mediterranean. Knolles.
5. A part cut off from the rest.
Suppose a board to be ten foot long, and one broad, one cut is reckoned so many foot. Mortimer's Husbandry.
6. A small particle; a shred.
It hath a number of short cuts or shreadings, which may be better called wishes than prayers. Hooker.
7. A lot made by cutting a stick.
My lady Zelmane and my daughter Mopsa may draw cuts, and the shortest cut speak first. Sidney.
A man may as reasonably draw cuts for his tenets, and regulate his persuasion by the cast of a die. Locke.
8. A near passage, by which some angle is cut off.
The ignorant took heart to enter upon this great calling, and instead of their cutting their way to it through the knowledge of the tongues, the fathers, and councils, they have taken another and a shorter cut. South.
There is a shorter cut, an easier passage. Decay of Piety.
The evidence of my sense is simple and immediate, and therefore I have but a shorter cut thereby to the assent to the truth of the things so evidenced. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
But the gentleman would needs see me part of my way, and carry me a short cut through his own ground, which saved me half a mile's riding. Swift's Examiner.
9. A picture cut or carved upon wood or copper, and impressed from it.
In this form, according to his description, he is set forth in the prints or cuts of martyrs by Cevalerius. Brown.
It is, I believe, used improperly by
Addison.
Madam Dacier, from some old cuts of Terence, fancies that the larva or persona of the Roman actors was not only a vizard for the face, but had false hair to it. Addison on Italy.
10. The stamp on which a picture is carved, and by which it is impressed.
11. The act or practice of dividing a pack of cards.
How can the muse her aid impart,
Unskill'd in all the terms of art?
Or in harmonious numbers put
The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.
12. Fashion; form; shape; manner of cutting into shape.
Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
That, sure, they've worn out christendom. Shakspere's Henry VIII.
His tawny beard was th' equal grace
Both of his wisdom and his face;
In cut and dye so like a tile,
A sudden view it would beguile. Hudibras.
They were so familiarly acquainted with him,
as to know the very cut of his beard. Stilling fleet.

Children love breeches, not for their cut or ease, but because the having them is a mark or step towards manhood. Locke.

A third desires you to observe well the toga on such a reverie, and asks you whether you can in conscience believe the sleeve of it to be of the true Roman cut. Addison.

Sometimes an old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity. Addison's Spectator.

Wilt thou buy there some high heads of the newest cut for my daughter? Arbutnot's J. Bull.

13. It seems anciently to have signified a fool or cully. To cut still signifies to cheat, in low language.

Send her money, knight: if thou hast her not in the end, call me cut. Shak. Twelfth Night.

14. Cut and long tail. A proverbial expression for men of all kinds. It is borrowed from dogs.

He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.—Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail, under the degree of a squire. Shakespeare.

At quintin he,
In honour of this bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee;
Come cut and long tail; for there be Six bachelors as bold as he. Ben Jonson.

CUTANEOUS. adj. [from cutis, Latin.]
Relating to the skin.

This serous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body. Floyer on Humours.

Some sorts of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by feeding much on acid unripe fruits and farinaceous substances. Arbutnot.

CUTICLE. n. f. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering plaster. It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle and nail. Bentley.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton's Opticks.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.]
Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. So Cuthwin is a knowing conqueror; Cuthred, a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophianus. Gibson's Camden.

CUTLASS. n. f. [coutelas, French.] This word is written sometimes cutlace, sometimes cuttleax; in Shakespeare, cuttleaxe; and in Pope, cutlash.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the seamen.

VOL. I.

Were 't not better
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant cuttleaxe upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. Shak. As you like it.
To the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlash launch'd the spouting blood, These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A poultry ring
That she did give, whose poesy was
For all the world like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Wotton.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler.
Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,
Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad? Hudibras.
If we could imagine a whole nation to be cut- *purse*s and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves? Bentley's Sermons.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.

3. [incisores.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders, are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders.
Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowell.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men;
an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolles.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the hor-ridest instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat soldiers, are abroad;
Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryd.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut- throat and abominable dealing. Carew's Survey.

CUTTING. n. f. [from cut.] A piece cut off; a chop.

The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good. Bacon.

Many are propagated above ground, by slips or cuttings. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [sepia.] A fish, which,
when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foulmouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens
the character of others. Hanmer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shak. Henry IV.

CYCLE. n. f. [syclus, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.

2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins
again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Calendar.

4. Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild, contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and excentrick, scribbled o'er
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb! Milton.

CYCLOID. n. f. [from κυκλοειδης, of κυκλος and ειδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cy- cloid.

CYCLOIDAL. adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance. Chambers.

CYCLOPÆDIA. n. f. [κύκλος and παιδεια.]
A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYGNET. n. f. [from cycnus, Latin.] A young swan.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death.
Shak. King John.

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them pris'ners underneath her wings.
Shak. Henry VI.

Cygnets from grey, turn white.
Young cygnets are good meat, if fatt'd with oats; but fed with weeds they taste fishy.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

CYLINDER. n. f. [κύλινδρον.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry, according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found. Wilkins.

The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bafes, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylinder, for vaulted turrets, and round buildings. Peacham.

CYLINDRICAL. } adj. [from cylinder.]
CYLINDRICK. } Partaking of the nature of a cylinder; having the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalaetitia, when several of the cylindrick striae are contiguous, and grow together into one sheaf, is called brushiron ore. Woodw.

Obstructions must be most incident to such parts of the body where the circulation and the elastick fibres are both smallest, and those glands which are the extremities of arteries formed into cylindrical canals. Arbuthnot.

CYMAR. n. f. [properly written finar.] A slight covering; a scarf.

Her comely limbs compos'd with decent care,
Her body shaded with a slight cymar,
Her bosom to the view was only bare. Dryden.

CYMATIUM. n. f. [Lat. from κυματιον, a little wave.] A member of architecture, whereof one half is convex, and the other concave. There are two sorts, of which one is hollow below, as the other is above. Harris.

In a cornice, the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions, or dentelli, make a noble show by their graceful projections. Speetator.

CYMBAL. n. f. [cymbalum, Latin.] A musical instrument.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fifes,
Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

If mirth should fail, I'll busy her with cares,
Silence her clamorous voice with louder wars;
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,

As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

CYNA'NTHROPY. n. f. [κυνων, κυνος, and ανθρωπος.] A species of madness in which men have the qualities of dogs.

CYNARCTO'MACHY. [κυνων, αρκτος, μαχη.] A word coined by Butler, to denote bear-baiting with a dog.

That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows
How saints lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras.

CYNEGETICKS. n. f. [κυνεγετικα.] The art of hunting; the art of training and hunting with dogs.

There are extant, in Greek, four books of cynegeticks, or venation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CY'NICAL. } adj. [κυνικος.] Having the qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling; satirical.

He doth believe that some new-fangled wit, (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art. Wilkins.

CY'NICK. n. f. [κυνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vilely doth this cynick rhyme!—
Get you hence, firrah: saucy fellow, hence. Shakspere.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows fullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Addison.

CY'NOSURE. n. f. [from κυνος ουσια.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it sees Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies,
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CY'ON. See CION.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. f. [cupressus, Latin.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies.

The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten. Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuf't my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shak.
He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Isaiah.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypress form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,
Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees. Shak. Henry VI.

CY'PRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,
Cyprus black as e'er was crow. Shakspere.

A cyprus, not a bosom,
Hides my poor heart! Shakspere.

CYST. } n. f. [κυστις.] A bag containing some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris. Wiseman.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbuthnot on Dist.

CY'STICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cyflick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbuthnot.

CYSTO'TOMY. n. f. [κυστις and τομω.] The act or practice of opening encysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [a Slavonian word, written more properly tzar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZARINA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D A

D Is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to t, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of d in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DA CAPO. [Ital.] A term in music, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

D A B

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

A fore should never be wiped by drawing a piece of tow or rag over it, but only by dabbing it with fine lint. Sharp.

DAB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small lump of any thing.
2. A blow with something moist or soft.
3. Something moist or slimy thrown upon one.
4. [In low language.] An artist; a man

D A B

expert at something. This is not used in writing.

5. A kind of small flat fish.
Of flat fish there are rays, flowks, dab, plaice. Carew.

DAB-CHICK. n. f. [colymbus.] a small waterfowl, called likewise dobchick, and didapper, and dipchick. Ray.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.

DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch.] To smear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.

A shadow like an angel with bright hair
Dabbled in blood. Shakspeare's Richard III.
I scarified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wifeman's Surgery.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,

A fable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.

1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.

Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impurer mud. Glanville's Apol.

The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them.

L'Estrange.

But when he found the boys at play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.

2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakspeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them: though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer and the printer, and left every thing standing. Atterbury to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]

1. One that plays in water.

2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth-ach, lest our dabblers in politicks should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Leuciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;
Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,
With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walton.

DA'CTYLE. n. f. [δακτυλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger: as, cāndidūs.

DAD. } n. f. [The child's way of DA'DDY. } expressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; ata, Greek; atta, Gothick; tata, Latin.] Father.

I was never so bethumped with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakspeare.

His loving mother left him to my care;
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DÆDAL. adj. [dædalus, Latin.]

1. Various; variegated.

2. Skilful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.

Nor hath

The dædal hand of Nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL. } n. f. [Supposed
DAFFODILLY. } by Skinner to be
DAFFODOWNDILLY. } corrupted from aphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the empalement, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Strew me the green ground with daffodown-dillies.

And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Spenser.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead

For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:

The short narcissus, and fair daffodil,

Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DAFT. v. a. [contracted from do aft; that is, to throw back, to throw off.]

To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not in use.

The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that daft the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

I would she had bestow'd this dotage on me;
I would have daft all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakspeare.

DAG. n. f. [dague, French.]

1. A dagger.

2. A hand-gun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.

DAGGER. n. f. [dague, French.]

1. A short sword; a poniard.

She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.

This sword a dagger had his page,
That was but little for his age;
And therefore waited on him so
As dwarfs upon knights-errant do. Hudibras.

He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.

3. [With printers.] The obelisk; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [†].

DA'GGERSDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggersdrawing,
And one another clapperclawing. Hudibras.

I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggersdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew; a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or deagan, to dip. They are probably all of the same root.]

To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire; to run through wet or dirt.

Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetch and carry sing-song up and down. Pope.

DA'GGLEDTAIL. adj. [daggle and tail.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud; bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of so many daggledtail parsons that happen to fall in their way. Swift.

DA'ILY. adj. [daglic, Saxon.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.

Much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince. Shakspeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble and continued grief. Prior.

DA'ILY. adv. Every day; very often.

Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how through hardy enterprise,
Many great regions are discovered. Fairy Queen.
A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DA'INTILY. adv. [from dainty.]

1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.

There is no region on earth so daintily watered, with such great navigable rivers. Howel.
Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily. Broom's View of Epick Poems.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.

4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS. n. f. [from dainty.]

1. Delicacy; softness.

What should yet thy palate please?
Daintiness and softer ease,
Sleeked limbs and finest blood? Ben Jonson.

2. Elegance; nicety.

The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Wotton.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the majesty of the dish. Hakewill on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.

Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Wotton.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleasing to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.

Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plumbs are a little dry. Bacon.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.

This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;
For even the ears of such as have no skill
Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Davies.

They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. Bacon.

3. Scrupulous; ceremonious.

Which of you all Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
I'll swear hath corns. Shaksf. Romeo and Juliet.
Therefore to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands.
Shakspeare.

Why should ye be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty limbs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine: in contempt.
Your dainty speakers have the curse,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

She then produc'd her dairy store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.
The shepherd swains, with sure abundance
blest,

On the fat flock and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why that's my dainty; I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shakspeare.

There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from dey, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Grounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Then the coarse and country fairy,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonson.
What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryden.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milch cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewifed, are exceeding commodious. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and flesh. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.]

The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:
The dairymaid enquires if she shall take
The trusty taylor, and the cook forfake. Dryden.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of sir Roger's dairy- maids. Addison.

DA'ISY. n. f. [dægereage, day's eye. Chaucer.] A spring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is scaly and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble obtusé cones. Miller.

When daïses pied, and violets blue,
And lady smocks all over white,
And cuckoo buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaksf.

As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and days-eyes, to behold him. Howel.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daïses
spring;

Now leaves the trees, and flow'rs adorn the ground. Pope.

This will find thee picking of daïses, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daïsy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. f. [dalei, Gothick; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long toft with storms, and beat with bitter winds,

High over hills, and low adown the dale,
She wand'red many a wood, and measur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou be true: do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire i' th' blood. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Conjugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the sound,
Where he with his Duesia dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r.

Fairy Queen.

That bower not mystick, where the sapient
king

Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milton.

Thou claim'st me for thy fire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shakspeare.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifler; a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made.

Ascham.

DA'LLOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]

A tuft, or clump. Not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallops till time ye do bind.

Tusser.

TO DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:

If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shakspeare's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hudibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtizans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shaksf.

3. To sport; to play; to frolick.

She her airie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdom.

TO DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knolles' History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperour, shulde never his dame have been slain. Chaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss.
Shakspeare.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Estrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shaksf. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hudibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Bears down the dams with unresisted sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cots away. Dryd.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry store,
Bear down the dams, and open every door.

Dryden.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and freight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO DAM. v. a. [Dennan, DeneDennan, Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shakspeare.

Home I would go,

But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring.

Orway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;

As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,

And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakspeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damm'st it up, the more it burns. Shakspeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damm'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long levell'd rule of streaming light.
Milton.

DA'MAGE. n. f. [domage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual cess and extortion. Davies.

He repulsed the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Addison.

5. In law.

Any hurt or hinderance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hinderance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Corwell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

To DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Addison.

To DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DA'MAGEABLE. adj. [from damage.]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DA'MASCENE. n. f. [damascenus, from Damascus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry-tree in blossom, the damascene and plum-trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear-plums and damascenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. f. [damasquin, Fr. damaschino, Ital. from Damascus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damascus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damask, or in lyne. Spenser.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damask napkin. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damask rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit,
Her damask late, now chang'd to purest white. Fairfax.

To DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon stuffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damask'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damascus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damascus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damask-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are so common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush, the damask-rose. Thomson.

DA'MASKENING. n. f. [from damasquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filing them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, Fr. dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts' Logick.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakspeare.

Shut your mouth dame! Shakspeare's K. Lear.
Sov'reign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry, for women of rank.

His father Faunus, a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden.

Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dams, she would not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shaksp.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

To DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions, Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn; to censure.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are so good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and, next, that you are not so arrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without hearings. Pope.

DA'MNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the snares of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is Were damnable. Shakspeare.

As he does not reckon every schism of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakspeare.

DA'MNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestowed upon them,
The more damnably their conserves stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been affrighted with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor.

Now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you contented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DA'MNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.]

Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DA'MNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damnea incest. Shaksp.

But, O! what damned minutes tells he o'er
Who doats, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves. Shakspeare.

Dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince
With falsehoods of most base and damn'd contrivance. Rowe.

D A M

DAMNIFIC. adj. [from damnify.] Procuring loss; mischievous.

To DAMNIFY. v. a. [from damnifico, Latin.]

1. To endamage; to injure; to cause loss to any.

He, who has suffered the damage, has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit, satisfaction: the damned person has the power of appropriating the goods or service of the offender, by right of self-preservation. Locke.

2. To hurt; to impair.

When now he saw himself so freshly rear,
As if late fight had nought him damned,
He was dismay'd, and 'gan his fate to fear.
Fairy Queen.

DAMNINGNESS. n. f. [from damning.] Tendency to procure damnation.

He may vow never to return to those sins which he hath had such experience of, for the emptiness and damningness of them, and so think himself a complete penitent. Hammond.

DAMP. adj. [dampe, Dutch.]

1. Moist; inclining to wet; not completely dry; foggy.

She said no more: the trembling Trojans hear,
O'erspread with a damp sweat and holy fear.
Dryden.

2. Dejected; sunk; depressed.

All these and more came flocking, but with looks Downcast and damp: yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimpse of joy. Milton.

DAMP. n. f.

1. Fog; moist air; moisture.

Night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholsome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied, with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

A rift there was, which from the mountain's height
Convey'd a glimmering and malignant light;
A breathing-place to draw the damps away,
A twilight of an intercepted day. Dryden.

2. A noxious vapour exhaled from the earth.

The heat of the sun, in the hotter seasons, penetrating the exterior parts of the earth, excites those mineral exhalations in subterraneous caverns, which are called damps: these seldom happen but in the summer-time; when, the hotter the weather is, the more frequent are the damps. Woodward.

3. Dejection; depression of spirit; cloud of the mind.

Adam, by this from the cold sudden damp
Recov'ring, and his scatter'd spirits return'd,
To Michael thus his humble words address'd.
Milton.

His name struck every where so great a damp,
As Archimedes through the Roman camp.
Roscommon.

Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy presence,
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts.
Addison.

An eternal state he knows and confesses that he has made no provision for, that he is undone for ever: a prospect enough to cast a damp over his sprightliest hours. Rogers.

This commendable repentment against me, strikes a damp upon that spirit in all ranks and corporations of men. Swift.

To DAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet; to moisten; to make humid.
2. To depress; to deject; to chill; to dull.

The very loss of one pleasure is enough to damp the relish of another. L'Estrange.
Dread of death hangs over the mere natural man, and, like the hand-writing on the wall, damps all his jollity. Atterbury.

D A N

It would be enough to damp their warmth in such pursuits, if they could once reflect, that in such course they will be sure to run upon the very rock they mean to avoid. Swift.

3. To weaken; to abate; to hebetate; to discourage.

A soft body dampeth the sound much more than a hard. Bacon.

4. To hebetate; to abate motion; to discourage; to dull.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

Unless an age too late, or cold Climate, or years, damp my intended wing Depress'd. Milton.

DAMPISHNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Tendency to wetness; fogginess; moisture.

It hath been used by some with great success to make their walls thick; and to put a lay of chalk between the bricks, to take away all dampishness. Bacon.

DAMPNESS. n. f. [from damp.] Moisture; fogginess.

Nor need they fear the dampness of the sky
Should flag their wings, and hinder them to fly;
'Twas only water thrown on sails too dry.
Dryden.

By stacks they often have very great loss, by the dampness of the ground, which rots and spoils it. Mortimer.

DAMPY. adj. [from damp.] Dejected; gloomy; sorrowful.

The lords did dispel dampy thoughts, which the remembrance of his uncle might raise, by applying him with exercises and disports. Hayward.

DAMSEL. n. f. [dameiselle, French.]

1. A young gentlewoman; a young woman of distinction: now only used in verse.

Kneeling, I my servant's smiles implore,
And one mad damsel dares disputes my pow'r.
Prior.

2. An attendant of the better rank.

With her train of damsels she was gone
In shady walks, the scorching heat to shun.
Dryden.

3. A wench; a country lass.

The clowns are whoremasters, and the damsels with child. Gay.

DAMSON. n. f. [corruptly from damascene.] A small black plum. See DAMASCENE.

My wife desir'd some damsons,
And made me climb with danger of my life.
Shakspeare.

DAN. n. f. [from dominus, as now don in Spanish; and donna, Italian, from domina.] The old term of honour for men, as we now say master. I know not that it was ever used in prose, and imagine it to have been rather of ludicrous import.

Dan Chaucer well of English undefil'd.
Douglas.

This whimp'd, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signor Junio's giant dwarf, dan Cupid.
Shakspeare.

Dick, if this story pleaseth thee,
Pray thank dan Pope, who told it me. Prior.

To DANCE. v. n. [danfer, Fr. dançar, Span. as some think from tanza, Arabic, a dance; as Junius, who loves to derive from Greek, thinks, from danais.]

To move in measure; to move with steps correspondent to the sound of instruments.

What say you to young Mr. Fenton? He capers, he dances, he has eyes of youth, he writes verses. Shakspeare.

To DANCE Attendance. v. n. To wait with suppleness and obsequiousness.

Men are sooner weary to dance attendance at the gates of foreign lords, than to tarry the good leisure of their own magistrates. Raleigh's Essays.

It upbraids you,
To let your father's friend, for three long months,
Thus dance attendance for a word of audience.
Dryden.

To DANCE. v. a. To make to dance; to put into a lively motion.

Thy grandfire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee. Shakf.

That I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

In pestilences, the malignity of the infecting vapour danceth the principal spirits. Bacon.

DANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] A motion of one or many in concert, regulated by music.

Our dance of custom, round about the oak of Herne the hunter. Shakspeare.

The honourablest part of talk is to give the occasion, and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. Bacon.

But you perhaps expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs and wanton dances grac'd.
Dryden.

DANCER. n. f. [from dance.] One that practises the art of dancing.

He at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I strook
The lean and wrinkled Cassius. Shakspeare.

Musicians and dancers! take some truce
With these your pleasing labours; for great use
As much weariness as perfection brings. Donne.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

It is a usual practice for our funambulours, or dancers on the rope, to attempt somewhat like to flying.

He, perfect dancer! climbs the rope
And balances your fear and hope. Prior.

Nature, I thought, perform'd too mean a part,
Forming her movements to the rules of art;
And, vex'd, I found that the musicians hand
Had o'er the dancer's mind too great command.
Prior.

DANCINGMASTER. n. f. [dance and master.] One who teaches the art of dancing.

The apes were taught their apes tricks by a dancingmaster. L'Estrange.

The legs of a dancingmaster, and the fingers of a musician, fall, as it were, naturally, without thought or pains, into regular and admirable motions. Locke on Understanding.

DANCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [dance and school.] The school where the art of dancing is taught.

They bid us to the English dancing schools,
And teach lavoltas high, and swift courantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels. Shaksp.

A certain Egyptian king endowed a dancing-school for the institution of apes of quality. L'Estrange.

DANDELION. n. f. [dent de lion, French.] The name of a plant.

It agrees in all respects with the hawkweed, but only in its having a single naked stalk, with one flower upon the top. Miller.

D A N

For cowslips sweet, let dandelions spread;
For Blouzelinda, blithsome maid, is dead!

Gay's Pastorals.

DA'NDIPRAT. n. f. [dandin, French.] A little fellow; an urchin: a word used sometimes in fondness, sometimes in contempt.

To DA'NDLE. v. a. [dandelen, Dutch*.]

1. To shake a child on the knee, or in the hands, to please and quiet him.

Then shall ye suck, and shall be born upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. Isaiah.

Thy little brethren, which, like fairy sprights, Oft skipt into our chamber those sweet nights, And, kiss'd and dandled on thy father's knee, Were brib'd next day to tell what they did see.

Donne.

Courts are but superficial schools

To dandle fools.

Bacon.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Dandled the kid.

Milton.

Motion occasions sleep, as we find by the common use of rocking froward children in cradles, or dandling them in their nurses arms.

Temple.

2. To fondle; to treat like a child.

Their child shall be advanc'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir;
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Shakspeare.

They have put me in a silk gown, and a gaudy fool's cap; I am ashamed to be dandled thus, and cannot look in the glass without blushing, to see myself turned into such a little pretty master.

Addison.

3. To delay; to procrastinate; to protract by trifles: not in use.

Captains do so dandle their doings, and dally in the service, as if they would not have the enemy subdued.

Spenser.

DA'NDLER. n. f. [from dandle.] He that dandles or fondles children.

DA'NDRUFF. n. f. [often written dendruff, from tan, the itch, and druf, sordid, filthy.] Scabs in the head; scurf at the roots of the hair.

DA'NEWORT. n. f. A species of elder; called also dwarf-elder, or wallwort.

DA'NGER. n. f. [danger, Fr. of uncertain derivation. Skinner derives it from damnum, Menage from angaria, Minshew from dav, death, to which Junius seems inclined.] Risk; hazard; peril.

They that sail on the sea, tell of the danger.

Ecclus.

Our craft is in danger to be set at nought.

AEs.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Shakspeare.

More danger now from man alone we find,
Than from the rocks, the billows and the wind.

Waller.

To DA'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To put in hazard; to endanger.

Pompey's son stands up

For the main soldier; whose quality going on,
The sides o' th' world may danger.

Shakspeare.

DA'NGERLESS. adj. [from danger.]

Without hazard; without risk; exempt from danger.

He shewed no less magnanimity in dangerless despising, than others in dangerous affecting, the multiplying of kingdoms.

Sidney.

DA'NGEROUS. adj. [from danger.] Hazardous; perilous; full of danger.

A man of an ill tongue is dangerous in his city.

Ecclus.

All men counsel me to take away thy life, likely to bring forth nothing but dangerous and wicked effects.

Sidney.

D A P

Already we have conquer'd half the war,
And the less dangerous part is left behind.

Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSLY. adv. [from dangerous.]

Hazardously; perilously; with danger.

But for your son, believe it, oh believe it,
Most dang'rously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him.

Shakspeare's Coriol.

A sort of naughty persons
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches and with conjurors.

It is just with God to permit those, which think they stand so surely, to fall most dangerously.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Plutarch says, Tellephilla, a noble lady, being dangerously sick, was advised to apply her mind to poetry.

Peacham.

If it were so, which but to think were pride,
My constant love would dangerously be tried.

Dryd.

DA'NGEROUSNESS. n. f. [from dangerous.]

Danger; hazard; peril.

I shall not need to mind you of judging of the dangerousness of diseases, by the nobleness of the part affected.

Boyle.

To DA'NGLE. v. n. [from hang, according to Skinner; as hang, hangle, dangle.]

To hang loose and quivering.

Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks.

Shakspeare.

He'd rather on a gibbet dangle,
Than miss his dear delight to wrangle.

Hudib.

Codrus had but one bed; so short, to boot,
That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out.

Dryden.

With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,

And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

But have you not with thought beheld
The sword hang dangling o'er the shield!

Prior.

2. To hang upon any one; to be an humble, useless, harmless follower.

The presbyterians, and other fanatics that dangle after them, are well inclined to pull down the present establishment.

Swift.

DA'NGLER. n. f. [from dangle.] A man that hangs about women only to waste time.

A dangler is of neither sex.

Ralph.

DANK. adj. [from tuncken, Germ. Skinner.] Damp; humid; moist; wet.

He her the maiden sleeping found
On the dank and dirty ground.

Shakspeare.

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and rising on stiff pinions tour
The mid aerial sky.

Milton.

Through each thicket, dank or dry
Like a black mist, low creeping, he held on His midnight search.

Milton.

Now that the fields are dank, and ways are mire,

Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a sullen day?

Milton.

By the rushy-fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays.

Milton.

Me, in my vow'd
Picture, the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and drooping weeds
To the stern god of sea.

Milton.

To wash the skins of beasts and fowls herewith, would keep them from growing dank in moist weather.

Grew.

DA'NKISH. adj. Somewhat dank.

They bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me.

Shakspeare.

To DAP. v. n. [corrupted from dip.] To let fall gently into the water: a word, I believe, only used by anglers.

I have taught him how to catch a chub, by dapping with a grasshopper.

Walton.

DAP'ATICAL. adj. [from dapaticus, Latin.] Sumptuous in cheer.

Bailey.

D A R

DA'PPER. adj. [dapper, Dutch.] Little and active; lively without bulk. It is usually spoken in contempt.

And on the tawny sands and shelves,
Trip the pert fairies and the dapper elves.

Milton.

A pert dapper spark of a magpye fancied the birds would never be governed till himself should sit at the helm.

L'Estrange.

DA'PPERLING. n. f. [from dapper.] A dwarf; a dandiprat.

Ainsworth.

DA'PPLE. adj. [from apple; as pommelé.] Marked with various colours; variegated; streaked; imbricated: it is used chiefly of animals.

My country neighbours do not find it impossible to think of a lame horse, till they have run over all beings that are, and then pitch on dapples.

Locke.

To DA'PPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To streak; to vary; to diversify with colours.

But under him a grey steed did he wield,
Whose sides with dappled circles were enight.

Spenser.

The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Shakspeare.

Horses that are dappled turn white; and old squirrels turn grisly.

Bacon.

The lark begins his flight,
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise.

Milton.

The dappled pink, and blushing rose,
Deck my charming Chloe's hair

Prior.

The gods, to curse Pamela with her pray'rs,
Gave the gilt coach and dappled Flanders mares.

Pope.

DAR. } n. f. A fish found in the Sea.

DART. } vern. Bailey. Dart is the same with Dace.

To DARE. v. n. pret. I durst; the preterit I dared belongs to the active dare; part. I have dared, [deajman, Saxon; derren, Dutch.] To have courage for any purpose; not to be afraid; to adventure; to be adventurous.

Darest thou be as good as thy word now?—
Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare; but, as thou art a prince, I fear thee.

Shakspeare.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more, is none.

Shakspeare.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously.

Shaks.

Neither of them was of that temper as to dare any dangerous fact.

Haywood.

The father bore it with undaunted soul,
Like one who durst his destiny controul.

Dryden.

Deliberate and well-weighed courage knows both to be cautious and to dare, as occasion offers.

Dryden.

We dare not build much upon such a notion or doctrine, till it be very fully examined.

Watts.

To DARE. v. a. pret. I dared, not I durst. To challenge; to defy.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare

Shaks.

To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

Shaks.

Here she stands:

Take but possession of her with a touch;
I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.

Shaks.

He had many days come half seas over; and sometimes passing further, came and lay at the mouth of the harbour, daring them to fight.

Knolles.

Masters of the arts of policy thought that they might even defy and dare Providence to the face.

South.

All cold, but in her breast, I will despise;
And dare all heat but that in Celia's eyes.

Rafe.

Time! I dare thee to discover
Such a youth and such a lover.

Dryden.

Presumptuous wretch! with mortal art to dare
Immortal power, and brave the thunderer. Granv.
To DARE Larks. To catch them by means of a looking-glass, or by keeping a bird of prey hovering aloft, which keeps them in amaze till caught; to amaze.

Shrimps are dipped up in shallow water with little round nets, not much unlike that which is used for daring larks. Carew.

As larks lie dar'd to shun the hobby's flight.
Dryden.

DARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Defiance;
challenge.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakspeare.

DARE. n. f. [leuciscus.] A small fish, the same with dace.

DAREFUL. adj. [dare and full.] Full of defiance. Not in use.

We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,

And beat them backward home. Shakspeare.

DARING. adj. [from dare.] Bold; adventurous; fearless; courageous; intrepid; brave; stout.

The last Georgick has many metaphors, but not so daring as this; for human passions may be more naturally ascribed to a bee than to an inanimate plant. Addison.

The song too daring, and the theme too great.

Grieve not, O daring prince! that noble heart.
Pope.

DARINGLY. adv. [from daring.] Boldly; courageously; fearlessly; impudently;
outrageously.

Some of the great principles of religion are every day openly and daringly attacked from the press. Atterbury.

Your brother, fir'd with his success,
Too daringly upon the foe did press. Halifax.

DARINGNESS. n. f. [from daring.] Boldness.

DARK. adj. [deonc, Saxon.]

1. Not light; wanting light.

Fleance, his son, who keeps him company,
Must embrace the fate of that dark hour. Shaksf.

While we converse with her, we mark
No want of day, nor think it dark. Waller.

2. Not of a showy or vivid colour.

If the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin, the priest shall pronounce him clean. Leviticus.

In Muscovy the generality of the people are more inclined to have dark coloured hair than flaxen. Boyle.

3. Blind; without the enjoyment of light.

Thou wretched daughter of a dark old man,
Conduct my weary steps. Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.

4. Opaque; not transparent: as, lead is a dark body.

5. Obscure; not perspicuous.

What may seem dark at the first, will afterwards be found more plain. Hooker.

Mean time we shall express our darker purpose.
Shakspeare.

6. Not enlightened by knowledge; ignorant.

The age, wherein he liv'd was dark; but he Could not want sight, who taught the world to see. Denham.

7. Gloomy; not cheerful.

All men of dark tempers, according to their degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison.

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold, hold! Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Cloud and ever-during dark
Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

3. Want of knowledge.

'Till we ourselves perceive by our own understandings, we are as much in the dark, and as void of knowledge, as before. Locke.

To DARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To darken; to obscure. Obsolete.

Fair when that cloud of pride, which oft doth
dark

Her goodly light, with smiles she drives away.
Spenser.

To DARKEN. v. a. [from dark.]

1. To make dark; to deprive of light.

Black with surrounding forests then it stood,
That hung above, and darken'd all the flood.
Addison.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write.
Pope.

2. To cloud; to perplex.

Such was his wisdom, that his confidence did seldom darken his foresight, especially in things near hand. Bacon.

3. To foul; to fully.

The lusts and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence.
Tillotson.

To DARKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DARKLING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Shakspeare.

Darkling stands

The varying shore o' th' world. Shakspeare.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and, in thadiest covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's
pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dry.

DARKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly;
gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DARKNESS. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; dif-ficultness to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakspeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded;
ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DARKSOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome, which shew
the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.
Milton.

He, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.
Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.
Pope.

DARLING. adj. [deorling, Saxon; diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Estrange.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.
Watts.

DARLING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakspeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide.
Halifax.

She became the darling of the princes.
Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.]

To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn? Gay.
He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DARNEL. n. f. [lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste?
Shakspeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden.

To DARRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger
la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarrians got the over hand.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shaks.

2. To apply to the fight: of single combatants.

Therewith they 'gan to hurlen greedily,
Redoubted battle ready to darraine. Spenser.

DART. n. f. [dard, French.]

1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.

Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Peacham.

O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,

The weapons round his hollow temples ring.

Dryden.

2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.

To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To throw offensively.

He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;

Th' invaders dart their jav'lines from afar. Dryd.

2. To throw; to emit: as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.

Pan came, and ask'd what magick caus'd my smart;

Or what ill eyes malignant glances dart. Pope.

To DART. v. n.

1. To fly as a dart.

2. To let fly with hostile intention.

Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shak.

To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]

1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.

If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.

A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man.

Tillotson.

2. To break by collision.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare.

David's throne shall then be like a tree,
Spreading and overshadowing all the earth;

Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash

All monarchies besides throughout the world.

Milton.

3. To throw water in flashes.

Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.

Middling his head, and prone to earth his view,
With ears and chest that dash the morning dew.

Tickel.

4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.

This tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on 't. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.

At once the brushing oars and brazen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depth below.

Dryden.

6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.

Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
Not wine, but more unwholesome law, Hudib.

I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances, as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.

Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Spectator.

7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.

Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,

A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.

8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.

To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

VOL. I.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.

His tongue

Dropp'd manna, and could make the worse appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash
Maturest councils. Milton.

Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo

This annual, humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton.

An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy,

Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.

To dash this cavil, read but the practice of christian emperors. South.

After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.

Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.

The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,

Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love.

Addison.

Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prior.

Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;

Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star.

Pope.

To DASH. v. n.

1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.

If the vessel be suddenly stopt in its motion, the liquor continues its motion, and dashes over the sides of the vessel. Cheyne.

2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall.

Thomson.

3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.

Doeg, tho' without knowing how or why,
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,

Thro' sense and nonsense, never out or in.

Dryden.

DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Collision.

By the touch ethereal rous'd,
The dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson.

2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.

There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.

3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.

He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In modern wit, all printed trash is Set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.

4. Sudden stroke; blow; act: ludicrous.

Stand back you lords, and give us leave awhile.
—She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Shakespeare.

DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.

And, with a murmuring sound,

Dash, dash, upon the ground,

To gentle slumbers call.

Dryden.

DA'STARD. n. f. [adastanza, Sax.] A coward; a poltron; a man infamous for fear.

The cruelty and envy of the people,

Permitted by our da'stard nobles,

Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be

Whoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare.

Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?

How long will Dares wait his da'stard foes?

Dryden.

Da'stard and drunkard, mean and insolent;

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,

In threats the foremost, but the last in fight.

Dryden.

Bug-bear thoughts, in the minds of children, make them da'stards, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Locke.

Curse on their da'stard souls, they stand astonished!

Addison.

To DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.

I'm weary of this flesh which holds us here,

And da'stards manly souls with hope and fear.

Dryden.

2. The time at which any event happened.

3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.

His days and times are past,

And my reliance on his fracted dates

Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.

My father's promise ties me not to time;

And bonds without a date, they say, are void.

Dryden.

4. End; conclusion.

What time would spare, from steel receives its date;

And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.

5. Duration; continuance.

Could the declining of this fate, O friend,

Our date to immortality extend? Denham.

Then raise,

From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,

New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date;

Founded in righteousness. Milton.

6. [from datylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.

Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

—They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.

Shakespeare.

1. To smear with something adhesive.

She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch. Exod.

2. To paint coarsely.

Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Otway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,

He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shakspeare.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with cost. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and where;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.

Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his conscience; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

TO DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;

And yet I must. Shakspeare.

DA'UBER. n. s. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.

What they called his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and still unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hangs a new angel two doors from us,
As fine as daubers hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBRY. n. s. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubry as this is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.

Not in vain th' industrious kind

With dauby wax and flow'rs the chinks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'dropes with dauby marling bind,
Or fear-cloth matts with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.

Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?—
—My leisure serves me, penfive daughter now. Shakspeare.

TO DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt. Milt.

Some preferences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DA'UNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakspeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the bold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost worth bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DA'UNTLESSNESS. n. s. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. s. [menedulu. It is supposed by Skinner so named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from dawl; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.] A bird.

I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daws to peck it. Shakspeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,

That daws, and trees, and rocks should last so long,

When we must in an instant pass to nought. Davies.

The loud daw, his throat displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. s. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Moxon.

TO DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.

Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the swift coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so dawke it. Moxon.

TO DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dayen, or advance toward day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakspeare.

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Matthew.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawns'd and Phœbus shin'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.

A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.

While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls so void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.

These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. s. [dæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Matthew.

Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackm.

Or object new Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shak.

3. Light; sunshine.

Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not rioting and drunkenness. Romans.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning play,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the thrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to survey
Dawnings of beams, and promises of day. Prior.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutheline his heir,
The justest man and truest in his days. F. Queen.

I think, in these days, one honest man is obliged to acquaint another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. Woodward.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Carte's Life of Ormonde.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Rescommen.

DAY

DAZ

DEA

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Would you th' advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day? Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryden.

DEAL. n. f. [deed, Dutch.]

1. Part.

A great deal of that which had been, was now to be removed out of the church. Hesher.

2. Quantity; degree of more or less. It was formerly joined with different words, to limit its meaning: as, some deal, in some degree, to some amount: we now either say, a great deal, or a deal without an adjective; but this is commonly, if not always, ludicrous or contemptuous.

When men's affections do frame their opinions, they are in defence of error more earnest, a great deal, than, for the most part, sound believers in the maintenance of truth, apprehending according to the nature of that evidence which scripture yieldeth. Hooker.

There is, indeed, store of matters, fitter and better a great deal for teachers to spend time and labour in. Hooker.

To weep with them that weep, doth ease some deal;

But sorrow flouted at is double death. Shaksp.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in! In scattering compliments, and tendering visits. Ben Jonson.

The charge some deal thee haply honour may, That noble Dudone had while here he liv'd.

Fairfax.

Possibly some never so much as doubted of the safety of their spiritual estate; and, if so, they have so much the more reason, a great deal, to doubt of it. South.

The author, who knew that such a design as this could not be carried on without a great deal of artifice and sophistry, has puzzled and perplexed his cause. Addison.

3. [from the verb to deal.] The art or practice of dealing cards.

How can the muse her aid impart,

Unskill'd in all the terms of art?

Or in harmonious numbers put

The deal, the shuffle, and the cut? Swift.

4. [deyl, Dutch.] Fir-wood, or the wood of pines.

I have also found, that a piece of deal, far thicker than one would easily imagine, being purposely interposed betwixt my eye placed in a room, and the clearer daylight, was not only somewhat transparent, but appeared quite through a lovely red. Boyle on Colours.

To DEAL. v. a. [deelen, Dutch.]

1. To distribute; to dispose to different persons.

Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to thy house. Isaiah.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

His lifted arms around his head he throws,

And deals in whistling air his empty blows. Dryd.

The business of mankind, in this life, being rather to act than to know, their portion of knowledge is dealt them accordingly. Addison.

How Spain prepares her banners to unfold,

And Rome deals out her blessings and her gold. Tickel.

Had the great men of antiquity been possessed of the art of printing, they would have made an advantage of it, in dealing out their lectures to the publick. Addison.

If you deal out great quantities of strong liquor to the mob, there will be many drunk. Watts.

2. To scatter; to throw about.

Keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,

Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,

When hissing through the skies the feather'd

deaths were dealt. Dryden.

3. To give gradually, or one after another.

The nightly mallet deals resounding blows. Gay.

4. To distribute the cards.

To DEAL. v. n.

1. To traffick; to transact business; to trade.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by a man himself, than by the mediation of a third. Bacon.

This is to drive a wholesale trade, when all other petty merchants deal but for parcels. Decay of Piety.

They buy and sell, they deal and traffick. South.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals,

They tell the secret which he first reveals. Prior.

2. To act between two persons; to intervene.

Sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. Bacon.

3. To behave well or ill in any transaction.

I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true. Tillotson.

4. To act in any manner.

Two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers, Are they that I would have thee deal upon. Shakspere.

5. To DEAL by. To treat well or ill.

This seems a vitious use.

Such an one deals not fairly by his own mind, nor conducts his own understanding aright. Locke.

6. To DEAL in. To have to do with; to be engaged in; to practise.

Suitors are so distast'd with delays and abuses, that plain-dealing, in denying to deal in suits at first, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. Bacon.

The Scripture forbids even the countenancing a poor man in his cause; which is a popular way of preventing justice, that some men have dealt in, though without that success which they proposed to themselves. Atterbury.

Among authors, none draw upon themselves more displeasure than those who deal in political matters. Addison.

True logick is not that noisy thing that deals all in dispute, to which the former ages had debased it. Watts' Logick.

7. To DEAL with. To treat in any manner; to use well or ill.

Neither can the Irish, nor yet the English lords, think themselves wronged, nor hardly dealt with, to have that which is none of their own given to them. Spenser's Ireland.

Who then shall guide

His people? Who defend? Will they not deal worse with his followers, than with him they dealt? Milton.

If a man would have his conscience deal clearly with him, he must deal severely with that. South's Sermons.

God did not only exercise this providence towards his own people, but he dealt thus also with other nations. Tillotson.

But I will deal the more civilly with his two poems, because nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

You wrote to me with the freedom of a friend, dealing plainly with me in the matter of my own trifles. Pope.

Reflect on the merits of the cause, as well as of the men, who have been thus dealt with by their country. Swift.

8. To DEAL with. To contend with.

If she hated me, I should know what passion to deal with. Sidney.

Gentlemen were commanded to remain in the country, to govern the people, easy to be dealt with whilst they stand in fear. Hayward.

Then you upbraid me; I am pleas'd to see

You're not so perfect, but can fail like me:

I have no God to deal with. Dryden.

To DEALBATE. v. a. [dealbo, Lat.]

To whiten; to bleach.

DEALBATION. n. f. [dealbatio, Latin.]

The act of bleaching or whitening; rendering things white which were not so before: a word in little use.

All seed is white in viviparous animals, and such as have preparing vessels, wherein it receives a manifold dealbation. Brown.

DEALER. n. f. [from deal.]

1. One that has to do with any thing.

I find it common with these small dealers in wit and learning, to give themselves a title from their first adventure. Swift.

2. A trader or trafficker.

Where fraud is permitted and connived at, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. Gulliver's Travels.

3. A person who deals the cards.

DEALING. n. f. [from deal.]

1. Practice; action.

Concerning the dealings of men, who administer government, and unto whom the execution of that law belongeth, they have their judge, who sitteth in heaven. Hooker.

What these are!

Whose own hard dealings teach them to suspect The thoughts of others. Shakspere.

But this was neither one pope's fault, nor one prince's destiny: he must write a story of the empire, that means to tell of all their dealings in this kind. Raleigh.

2. Intercourse.

It were to be wished, that men would promote the happiness of one another, in all their private dealings, among those who lie within their influence. Addison.

3. Measure of treatment; mode in which one treats another.

God's gracious dealings with men, are the aids and auxiliaries necessary to us in the pursuit of piety. Hammond.

4. Traffick; business.

The doctor must needs die rich; he had great dealings in his way for many years. Swift.

DEAMBULATION. n. f. [deambulatio, Latin.] The act of walking abroad.

DEAMBULATORY. adj. [deambulo, Lat.]

Relating to the practice of walking abroad.

DEAN. n. f. [decanus, Latin; doyen, French.] From the Greek word δῆνα; in English, ten; because he was anciently set over ten canons or prebendaries at least in some cathedral church. Ayliffe.

The second dignitary of a diocese.

As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new (the new are those which Henry VIII. upon suppression of abbeyes transformed from abbot or prior, and convent, to dean and chapter) so there are two means of creating these deans; for those of the old foundation are brought to their dignity much like bishops, the king first sending out his congé d'elire to the chapter, the chapter then choosing and the bishop confirming them, and giving his mandate to instal them. Those of the new foundation are, by a shorter course, installed by virtue of the king's letters patent, without either election or confirmation.

This word is also applied to divers, that are chief of certain peculiar churches or chapels; as the dean of the king's chapel, the dean of the Arches, the dean of St. George's chapel at Windsor, and the dean of Bocking in Essex. Cowell.

The dean and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, were of great use in the church; they were not only to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, but chiefly for government in causes ecclesiastical. Use your best means to prefer such to those places who are fit for that purpose. Bacon.

DEANERY. n. f. [from dean.]

1. The office of a dean.
He could no longer keep the deanery of the chapel-royal. Clarendon.
2. The revenue of a dean.
Put both deans in one; or, if that's too much trouble,
Instead of the deans make the dean'ry double. Swift.

3. The house of a dean.
Take her by the hand, away with her to the deanery, and dispatch it quickly. Shakspeare.
- DE'ANSHIP. n. f. [from dean.] The office and rank of a dean.

- DEAR. adj. [deon, Saxon.]
1. Beloved; favourite; darling.
Your brother Glo'ster hates you.
—Oh, no, he loves me, and he holds me dear. Shakspeare.
The dear, dear name she bathes in flowing tears,
Hangs o'er the tomb. Addison.
And the last joy was dearer than the rest. Pope.

What made directors cheat the South-sea year?
To feed on ven'ison when it sold so dear. Pope.
3. Scarce; not plentiful: as, a dear year.
4. It seems to be sometimes used in Shakspeare for deer; sad; hateful; grievous.
What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies? Twelfth Night.
Let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril. Timon.

- Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrapt me up a-while:
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve Lending me this acquaintance. King Lear.
Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,
Or ever I had seen that day. Hamlet.
Thy other banish'd son, with his dear fight Struck pale and bloodless. Titus Andronicus.
- DEAR. n. f. A word of endearment; darling.

- That kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakspeare.
Go, dear; each minute does new danger bring. Dryden.
- See, my dear,
How lavish nature has adorn'd the year. Dryden.

- DE'ARBOUGHT. adj. [dear and bought.]
Purchased at a high price.
O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dearbought with lasting woe. Milton.
Such dearbought blessings happen ev'ry day,
Because we know not for what things to pray. Dryden.

- Forget not what my ransom cost,
Nor let my dearbought soul be lost. Roscommon.
- DE'ARLING. n. f. [now written darling.] Favourite.
They do feed on nectar, heavenly wife,
With Hercules and Hebe, and the rest
Of Venus' darlings, through her bounty blest. Spenser.

- The whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of friendship between them two. Bacon.
He who hates his neighbour mortally, and wisely too, must profess all the dearness and friendship, with readiness to serve him. South.
2. Scarcity; high price.
Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing, which is seen in the dearness of corn. Swift.
- DE'ARNLY. adv. [deopn, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen. Obsolete.
At last, as chanc'd them by a forest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearly cried
With piercing shrieks. Spenser.

- DEARTH. n. f. [from dear.]
1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth, it drained much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.
There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewn with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.
  2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shakspeare.
Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth. Milton.

3. Barrenness; sterility.
The French have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryden.
- To DEARTICULATE. v. a. [de and articulus, Latin.] To disjoint; to dismember. Did.

- DEATH. n. f. [deaf, Saxon.]
1. The extinction of life; the departure of the soul from the body.
He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Hebrews.
They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity or death. Shakspeare.
Death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come. Shakspeare.
He must his acts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Mortality; destruction.
How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakspeare.
3. The state of the dead.
In swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakspeare.
4. The manner of dying.
Thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. Ezekiel.
5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.
I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakspeare.

- If I gaze now, 'tis but to see What manner of death's head 'twill be,
When it is free
From that fresh upper skin,
The gazer's joy, and sin. Suckling.
6. Murder; the act of destroying life unlawfully.
As in manifesting the sweet influence of his

- mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon.
7. Cause of death.
They cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. 2 Kings.

  8. Destroyer.
All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and be the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day. Broom's View of Epic Poetry.
  9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.
Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;
They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dryden.
Sounded at once the bow, and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses thro' the skies. Dryden.
Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death. Pope.
  10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.
We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghastly enemy, and from everlasting death. Church Catechism.
- DE'ATHBED. n. f. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.
Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakspeare.
Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakspeare.
These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South's Sermons.
Then round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joy us of our conquest early won. Dryden.
A death-bed figure is certainly the most humbling sight in the world. Collier.
A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Atterbury.
Fame can never make us lie down contentedly on a death-bed. Pope.
- DE'ATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.
Your cruelty was such, as you would spare his life for many deathful torments. Sidney.
Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wasted that lively virtue of nature in man, and beasts, and plants. Raleigh.
Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in that noise, Ruin, destruction at the utmost point. Milton.
These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd. Pope.
- DE'ATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal; never dying; everlasting.
God hath only immortality, though angels and human souls be deathless. Bayle.
Their temples wreath'd with leaves, that still renew;
For deathless laurel is the victor's due. Dryden.
Faith and hope themselves shall die,
While deathless charity remains. Prior.
- DE'ATHLIKE. adj. [death and like.] Resembling death; still; gloomy; motionless; placid; calm; peaceful; undisturbed; resembling either the horrors or the quietness of death.
Why dost thou let thy brave soul lie suppress'd
In deathlike slumbers, while thy dangers crave
A waking eye and hand? Grassano.
A deathlike sleep!
A gentle wasting to immortal life! Milton.
On seas, on earth, and all that in them dwell,
A deathlike quiet and deep silence fell. Waller.

Black melancholy fits, and round her throws
A deathlike slumber, and a dread repose. Pope.
DEATH'S-DOOR. [death and door.] A near approach to death; the gates of death.
Johnson. It is now a low phrase.

I myself knew a person of great sanctity, who was afflicted to death's-door with a vomiting.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant

There was a poor young woman, that had brought herself even to death's-door with grief for her sick husband. L'Estrange.

1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.

Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and sensuality debase men into beasts. Broome.

As much as you raise silver, you debase gold, for they are in the condition of two things put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable; to degrade.

It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes.

Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifles.

Dryden.

Restraining others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity.

Dryden.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.

He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression. Addison.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse those which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it.

Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.

He reformed the coin, which was much adulterated and debased in the times and troubles of king Stephen. Hale.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

DEBASEMENT. n. f. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading; degradation.

It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or boar. Gov. of Tongue.

DEBASER. n. f. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBATABLE. adj. [from debate.] Disputable; subject to controversy.

The French requested, that the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots. Hayward.

DEBATE. n. f. [debat, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.

A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts.

2. A quarrel; a contest: it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.

Shakspeare.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryd.

DEBATE. v. a. [debatre, French.] To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

Debate thy cause with thy neighbour himself, and discover not a secret to another. Proverbs.

He could not debate any thing without some commotion, even when the argument was not of moment. Clarendon.

putant; a controvertist.

DEBAUCH. v. a. [desbaucher, Fr. debauchari, Latin.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.

A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust;
first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection. Dryden.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakspeare.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable for him to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality. Tillotson.

DEBAUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.

He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Calamy.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.

The first physicians by debauch were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains the trade. Dryd.

DEBAUCHEE. n. f. [from desbauché, Fr.]

A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest de-bauchees amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments. South.

DEBAUCHER. n. f. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBAUCHERY. n. f. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewd-
ness.

Oppose vices by their contrary virtues; hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them. Swift.

DEBAUCHMENT. n. f. [from debauch.]

The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravish-

DEBELLATE. v. a. [tin.] To conquer; to overcome in war. Not in use.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Bacon.

Him long of old

Thou didst debel, and down from heaven cast
With all his army. Milton.

DEBELLATION. n. f. [from debellatio,
Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBENTURE. n. f. [debetur, Lat. from debeo.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.

You modern wits, should each man bring his claim,

Have desperate debentures on your fame;
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,

If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid.
Swift.

DEBILE. adj. [debilis, Latin.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength;
imbecile; impotent.

I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or soil'd some debile wretch, which without note
There's many else have done. Shakspeare.

DEBILITATE. v. a. [debilito, La- tin.] To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.

In the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seemed as weakly to fail as their debilitated posterity ever after. Brook.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment. Harvey on Consump.

DEBILITATION. n. f. [from debilitatio, Latin.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. King Charles.

DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitas, Lat.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney

Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniencies of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintness, and sometimes sudden death. Arbuthnot.

DEBONA'IR. adj. [debonnaire, French.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant. Obsolete.

Crying, let be that lady debonair, Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare To battle, if thou mean her love to gain. Spenser.

Zephyr met her once a-maying; Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair, So buxom, blithe, and debonair. Milton.

The nature of the one is debonair and accessible; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine. Howell's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair, But was withal discreet and debonair, Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil. Dryden.

DEBONA'IRLY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; dette, Fr.]

1. That which one man owes to another.

There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum. Duppa's Devotions.

Those thousand decencies, that daily flow
From all her words and actions. Milton.

In good works there may be goodness in the general: but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Sprat.

Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Atterbury.

She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought:
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.
And must I own, she said, my secret smart,
What with more decence were in silence kept? Dryden.

The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or misbecomes. South.

Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroic poem. Addison.

3. Modesty; not ribaldry; not obscenity.
Immodest words admit of no defence;
For want of decency is want of sense. Roscom.

DECENNIAL. adj. [from decennium, Lat.] What continues for the space of ten years.

DECENNOVAL. } adj. [decem and no-

Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logick.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition.

Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Lat.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I make haste to the casting and comparing of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot.

Watson.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert, Unmeritable, shuns your high request.

Shaksp.

Bellarmino saith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once.

Hall.

That Methuselah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses.

Brown.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.] Decisiveness.

Diä.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ready deflagrability, if I may so speak, of salt-petre did permit us to imagine.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [deflagratio, Lat.] A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Æthiops with fire, with sal prunellæ, and many others. Quincy.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the deflagration is over, you shall always find the paper moist. Boyle.

TO DEFLECT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.]

To turn aside; to deviate from a true course or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheelth to the west. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

For, did not some from a straight course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world erect. Blackmore.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [deflecto, Lat.]

DEFLUXION. n. f. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downward.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxions from the head. Bacon.

DE'FLY. adv. [from dest.] Dexterously; skilfully. Obsolete. Properly defily.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot

To the instrument;

They dauncen defly, and singen soote,

In their merriment. Spenser.

DEFOEDATION. n. f. [from defædus, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defedation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and instilled through the whole, which the defædation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentley.

DEFO'RCEMENT. n. f. [from force, Fr.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

TO DEFO'RM. v. a. [deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up. Shakspeare.

Wintry blasts

Deform the year delightful. Thomson.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair. Dryden.

DEFO'RM. adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That who so kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame. Spenser.

So spake the griesly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. Milton.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long Dry-eyed behold? Milton.

DEFORMA'TION. n. f. [deformatio, Lat.]

A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFO'RMED. participial adj. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

DEFO'RMITY. n. f. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Uglinefs; illfavouredness.

I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakspeare.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakspeare.

Where sits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part. Shakspeare.

Why should not man,
Retaining still divine similitude
In part, from such deformities be free,
And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt? Milton.

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity. Dryden.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and novelty are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming. King Charles.

DEFO'RSOR. n. f. [from forceur, Fr.]

One that overcomes and casts out by force. A law term. Blount.

TO DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.]

To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile: with of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. Theſſalonians.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long. Ecclus.

Churches seem injured and defrauded of their right, when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour. Hooker.

There they, who brothers better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne;
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

But now he seiz'd Briseis' heav'nly charms,
And of my valour's prize defrauds my arms. Pope.

There is a portion of our lives which every wise man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country. Dryden.

DEFRAUDA'TION. n. f. [defraudo, Lat.] Privation by fraud.

Their impostures are worse than any other, deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death. Brown.

DEFRA'UDER. n. f. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow severe,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere. Blackmore.

TO DEFRA'Y. v. a. [defrayer, Fr.] To bear the charges of; to discharge expences.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices. 2 Mac.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defrayed, is the chief part of good advisement. Spenser.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay; neither shall you stay one day the less for that. Bacon.

DEFRA'YER. n. f. [from defray.] One that discharges expences.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from defray.] The payment of expences.

DEFT. adj. [dæft, Sax.] Obsolete.

1. Neat; handsome; spruce.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerless meed,
Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed. Gay.

DEFUNCT. adj. [defunctus, Lat.] Dead; deceased.

I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In me defunct, and proper satisfaction. Shaksp.
Here entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies, fly. Hudibras.

DEFUNCT. n. f. [from the adjective.]
One that is deceased; a dead man or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead. Shaksp.

In many cases, the searchers are able to report the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they receive the fame from the friends of the defunct. Graunt.

DEFUNCTION. n. f. [from defunct.]
Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of king Pharamond. Shaksp.

To DEFY. v. a. [deffier, Fr. from de fide decedere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again
Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton.
Where seek retreat, now innocence is fled?
Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;
Without it, tremble now when heav'n is nigh. Dryden.

Agis, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,
To single fight the boldest foe defied. Dryden.

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.

As many fools that stand in better lace,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word Defy the matter. Shaksp.

DEFY. n. f. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight: this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,
His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:

With clangour rings the field, resounds the vaulted sky. Dryden.

DEFYER. n. f. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly defier.

God may revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man. South.

DEGENERACY. n. f. [from degeneratio, Latin.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A desertion of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us. Tillotson.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present. Swift.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.

To DEGENERATE. v. n. [degenerare, Lat. degenerer, Fr. degenerar, Span.]

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresseth decency, it degenerates into insolence and impiety. Tillotson.

3. To fall from its kind; to grow wild or base.

Most of those fruits that use to be grafted, if they be set of kernels or stones, degenerate. Bacon.

DEGENERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

8. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough
To fight against me under Picrey's pay;
To dog his heels, and curtsy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate. Shaksp.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be Asham'd of them, than they of thee;
Degenerate from their ancient brood,
Since first the court allow'd them food. Swift.

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all shall turn degen'rate, all deprav'd;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot!
One man except. Milton.

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done some person or other. Locke.

DEGENERATENESS. n. f. [from degenerate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild, or out of kind.

DEGENERATION. n. f. [from degenerate.]

1. A deviation from the virtue of one's ancestors.

2. A falling from a more excellent state to one of less worth.

3. The thing changed from its primitive state.

In plants, these transplantations are obvious;
as that of barley into oats, of wheat into darnell;
and those grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, aracus, ægilops, and other degenerations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEGENEROUS. adj. [from degener, Lat.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of ancestors.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some men's immoderate demands ever betray me to that degenerous and unmanly slavery, which should make me strengthen them by my consent. King Charles.

Shame, instead of piety, restrains them from many base and degenerous practices. South.

Degenerous passion, and for man too base,
It seats its empire in the female race;
There rages, and to make its blow secure,
Puts flattery on, until the aim be sure. Dryden.

DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.]

In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see heroes, like Hercules at the distaff, thus degenerously employed! Decay of Piety.

DEGLUTITION. n. f. [deglutition, Fr. from deglutio, Lat.] The act or power of swallowing.

When the deglutition is totally abolished, the patient may be nourished by clysters. Arbuth.

DEGRADATION. n. f. [degradation, Fr.]

1. A deprivation of dignity; dismissal from office.

The word degradation, is commonly used to denote a deprivation and removing of a man from his degree. Ayliffe.

2. Degeneracy; baseness.

So deplorable is the degradation of our nature, that whereas before we bore the image of God,
we now retain only the image of men. South.

3. Diminution, with respect to strength, efficacy, or value.

4. [In painting.] A term made use of to express the lessening and rendering confused the appearance of distant objects in a landscape, so as they may appear there as they would do to an eye placed at that distance from them. Diſt.

To DEGRADE. v. a. [degrader, Fr.]

1. To put one from his degree; to deprive him of his office, dignity, or title.

He should Be quite degraded, like a hedgeborn swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shaksp.

2. To lessen; to diminish the value of.

Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume,
Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own. Mist.
All higher knowledge in her presence falls
Degraded. Milton.

3. To reduce from a higher to a lower state, with respect to qualities: as, gold is degraded into silver.

DEGREE. n. f. [degré, Fr. from gradus, Latin.]

1. Quality; rank; station; place of dignity.

It was my fortune, common to that age,
To love a lady fair, of great degree,
The which was born of noble parentage,
And set in highest seat of dignity. Spenser.
I embrace willingly the ancient received course and conveniency of that discipline, which teacheth inferior degrees and orders in the church of God. Hooker.

Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity. Psalms.

Well then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale. Shaksp.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shaksp.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame
Of high degree, Honoria was her name. Dryden.

Farmers in degree;
He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryd.

But is no rank, no station, no degree,
From this contagious taint of sorrow free? Prior.

2. The comparative state and condition in which a thing is.

The book of Wisdom noteth degrees of idolatry, making that of worshipping petty and vile idols more gross than simply the worshipping of the creature. Bacon.

As if there were degrees in infinite,
And Heav'n itself had rather want perfection,
Than punish to excess. Dryden.

Poesy
Admits of no degrees; but must be still Sublimely good, or despicably ill. Roscommon.

3. A step or preparation to any thing.

Her first degree was by setting forth her beauties, truly in nature not to be misliked, but as much advanced to the eye, as abased to the judgment, by art. Sidney.

Which fight the knowledge of myself might bring,
Which to true wisdom is the first degree. Davies.

4. Order of lineage; descent of family.

King Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

Diſ.

11. [In philosophy.] The vehemence or slackness of the hot or cold quality.

The second, third, and fourth degrees of heat are more easily introduced than the first: every one is both a preparative and a step to the next.

South.

By DEGREES. adv. Gradually; by little and little.

Their bodies are exercised in all abilities both of doing and suffering, and their minds acquainted by degrees with danger.

Sidney.

Doth not this ethereal medium, in passing out of water, glass, crystal, and other compact and dense bodies, into empty spaces, grow denser and denser by degrees?

Newton.

Exulting in triumph now swell the bold notes;
In broken air, trembling, the wild musick floats;
Till by degrees remote and small,

The strains decay,
And melt away.

In a dying, dying fall.

Pope.

A person who is addicted to play or gaming, though he took but little delight in it at first, by degrees contracts a strong inclination towards it.

Spectator.

DE'ICIDE. n. f. [from deus and caedo, Latin.] The murder of God; the act of killing God. It is only used in speaking of the death of our blessed Saviour.

Explaining how Perfection suffer'd pain,
Almighty languish'd, and Eternal died;
How by her patient victor Death was slain,
And earth profan'd, yet blest'd, with deicide!

Prior.

To DEJE'CT. v. a. [dejicio, Latin.]

1. To cast down; to afflict; to grieve; to depress; to sink; to discourage; to crush.

Well, I am your theme; you have the start of me; I am dejected; ignorance itself is a plummet o'er me; use me as you will. Shaksp.

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear.

Shakspere.

Nor think to die dejects my lofty mind;
All that I dread is leaving you behind!

Pope.

2. To change the form with grief; to make to look sad.

Eneas here beheld, of form divine,
A godlike youth in glitt'ring armour shine,
With great Marcellus keeping equal pace,
But gloomy were his eyes, dejected was his face.

Dryden.

DEJE'CT. adj. [dejectus, Latin.] Cast down; afflicted; low-spirited.

I am of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his musick vows.

Shakspere.

DEJE'CTEDLY. adv. [from deject.] In a dejected manner; sadly; heavily.

No man in that passion doth look strongly, but dejectedly: and that repulsion from the eyes diverteth the spirits, and gives heat more to the ears, and the parts by them.

Bacon.

DEJE'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from dejected.] The state of being cast down; a lowness of spirits.

Diſ.

DEJE'CTION. n. f. [dejection, Fr. from dejectio, Latin.]

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryden.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELUDER. n. f. [from delude.] A beguiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, all fair deluder speak; Answer methis, ere yet my heart does break. Granville.

And thus the sweet deluders tune their song. Pope.

To DELVE. v. a. [delvan, Sax. delven, Dutch; perhaps from delvax, a hog. Junius.]

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard But I will delve one yard below the mines, And blow them at the moon. Shakespeare.

VOL. I.

Delve of convenient depth your thrashing floor;

With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er. Dryden.

The filthy swine with delving snout The rooted forest undermine. Philips.

2. To fathom; to sift; to sound one's opinion. Figuratively.

What's his name and birth? —I cannot delve him to the root: his father Was call'd Sicilius. Shakespeare.

DELVE. n. f. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pitfall; a den; a cave.

He by and by His feeble feet directed to the cry; Which to that shady delve him brought at last, Where Mammon erst did sun his treasury. Spenser.

Such a light and mettled dance Saw you never yet in France; And by leadmen, for the nonce, That turn round like grindle-stones, Which they dig out fro' the delves, For their bairns bread, wives, and selves. Ban Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Di.

DE'LVER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DE'LUGE. n. f. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Latin.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force His channel to a new or narrow course, No longer then within his banks he dwells, First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

To DE'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water. The restless flood the land would overflow, By which the delug'd earth would useless grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, till delug'd by the foam, The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss. Philips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood, Shall deluge all. Pope.

DELUSIVE. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair, Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear. Prior. The happy whimsy you pursue, Till you at length believe it true; Caught by your own delusive art, You fancy first, and then assert. Prior.

While the base and groveling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest. Tatler.

Phænomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Woodward.

DELUSORY. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Glanville.

DE'MAGOGUE. n. f. [δημαγωγος.] A ringleader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMA'IN. } n. f. [domaine, French.]
DEME'AN. }
DEME'SNE. }

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Phillips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided A gentleman of noble parentage, Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feigniory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

To DEMAND. v. a. [demand, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority. The pound of flesh, which I demand of him, Is dearly bought; 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David *demand*ed of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Samuel.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

Young one, Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems, They crave to be *demand*ed. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being *demand*ed, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Peticham on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones.

Daniel.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them.

Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.
3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookseller tells me, the demand for those my papers increases daily.

Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seising of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law.

Blount.

DEMANDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All fairs demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper.

Bacon.

DEMANDANT. n. f. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands.

Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress.

One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted.

Spectator.

DEMANDER. n. f. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.
2. One that asks a question.

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devoutly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately.

South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever.

Tillotson.

Strephon had long perplex'd his brains, How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night.

Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue.

Now, out of doubt, Antipholus is mad; Else he would never so demean himself.

Shakspeare.

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demener, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Sidney.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

Hooker.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone, As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen.

Milton.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek, Ill worthy I.

Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing, and upon the retreat.

Clarendon.

Shakspeare.

DEMI-GOD. n. f. [semi and god.] Partaking of divine nature; half a god; an hero produced by the cohabitation of divinities with mortals.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a semi-god.

Sidney.

Be gods, or angels, semi-gods.

Milton.

Transported semi-gods stood round, And men grew heroes at the sound, Enflam'd with glory's charms.

Pope.

Nay, half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)

A fit of vapours clouds this semi-god.

Pope.

DEMI-LANCE. n. f. [semi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

DEMONSTRABLE. adj. [demonstrabilis, Lat.] That may be proved beyond doubt or contradiction; that may be made not only probable but evident.

The grand articles of our belief are as demonstrable as geometry. Glanville.

DEMONSTRABLY. adv. [from demonstrable.] In such a manner as admits of certain proof; evidently; beyond possibility of contradiction.

He should have compelled his ministers to execute the law, in cases that demonstrably concerned the publick peace. Clarendon.

To DEMONSTRATE. v. a. [demonstro, Lat.] To prove with the highest degree of certainty; to prove in such a manner as reduces the contrary position to evident absurdity.

We cannot demonstrate these things so, as to shew that the contrary often involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATION. n. f. [demonstratio, Latin.]

1. The highest degree of deducible or argumental evidence; the strongest degree of proof; such proof as not only evinces the position proved to be true, but shows the contrary position to be absurd and impossible.

What appeareth to be true by strong and invincible demonstration, such as wherein it is not by any way possible to be deceived, thereunto the mind doth necessarily yield. Hooker.

Where the agreement or disagreement of any thing is plainly and clearly perceived, it is called demonstration. Locke.

2. Indubitable evidence of the senses or reason.

Which way soever we turn ourselves, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

DEMONSTRATIVE. adj. [demonstrativus, Latin.]

He must be of a very sluggish or querulous humour, that shall demur upon setting out, or demand higher encouragements than the hope of heaven. Decay of Piety.

News of my death from rumour he receiv'd,
And what he wish'd he easily believ'd;

But long demurr'd, though from my hand he knew

I liv'd, so loth he was to think it true. Dryden.

3. To doubt; to have scruples or difficulties; to deliberate.

There is something in our composition that thinks and apprehends, and reflects and deliberates, determines and doubts, consents and denies; that wills and demurs, and resolves, and chuses, and rejects. Bentley.

To DEMUR. v. a. To doubt of.

The latter I demur; for in their looks Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears. Milton.

DEMU'R. n. f. [from the verb.] Doubt; hesitation; suspense of opinion.

O progeny of Heav'n, empyreal thrones!
With reason hath deep silence and demur
Seiz'd us, though undismay'd. Milton.

Certainly the highest and dearest concerns of a temporal life are infinitely less valuable than those of an eternal; and consequently ought, without any demur at all, to be sacrificed to them, whensoever they come in competition with them. South.

All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, Do, and we go snacks. Pope.

DEMURE. adj. [des mœurs, French.]

Put on a sober habit, Talk with respect, and swear but now and then, Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look demurely. Shakspeare.

Elop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, sat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her. Bacon.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer, Soft smiling, and demurely looking down; But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

2. In the following line it is the same with solemnly. Warburton.

Hark, how the drums demurely wake the sleepers! Shakspeare.

DEMURENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.

Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demureness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMURRAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMURRER. n. f. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.]

A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work. But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is their stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cotwell

DEN

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

They here dispersed, some in the air, some on the earth, some in the waters, some amongst the minerals, den, and caves, under the earth. Hooker.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den, And fright him there? Shakspeare.

The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal dame; The cavern, only to her father known, By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes; In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both. Gibson's Camden.

DENAY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

To her in haste, give her this jewel: say, My love can give no place, bide no denay. Shakspeare.

DENDRO'LOGY. n. f. [δένδρον and λόγος.] The natural history of trees.

DENI'ABLE. adj. [from deny.] That may be denied; that to which one may refuse belief.

The negative authority is also deniable by reason. Brown.

DENI'AL. n. f. [from deny.]

1. Negation; the contrary to affirmation.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.

No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial: I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shakspeare.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.

He, at ev'ry fresh attempt, is repell'd With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENI'ER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage, or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.

It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Ch.

DEN

DENIE'R. n. f. [from denarius, Lat. It is pronounced as denier, in two syllables.] A small denomination of French money; the twelfth part of a sou.

You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

—No, not a denier. Shakspeare.

TO DENIGRATE. v. a. [denigro, Lat.]

To blacken; to make black.

By suffering some impression from fire, bodies are casually or artificially denigrated in their natural complexion: thus are charcoals made black by an infection of their own fustitus. Brown.

Hartshorn, and other white bodies, will be denigrated by heat; yet camphire would not at all lose its whiteness. Boyle.

DENIGRATION. n. f. [denigratio, Lat.]

A blackening, or making black.

These are the advenient and artificial ways of denigration, answerably whereto may be the natural progress. Brown.

In several instances of denigration, the metals are worn off, or otherwise reduced into very minute parts. Boyle.

DENIZA'TION. n. f. [from denizen.] The act of enfranchising, or making free.

That the mere Irish were reputed aliens, appears by the charters of denization, which in all ages were purchased by them. Davies.

DENIZEN. } n. f. [from dinasddyn, a

DENISON. } man of the city; or din-nesydd, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Dav.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods, Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes, From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denizen of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;

The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

TO DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several To these three places, yet all are in all; Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous; Falsehood is denizen'd, virtue is barbarous. Donne.

DENO'MINABLE. adj. [denomino, Latin.]

That may be named or denoted.

An inflammation consists of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown.

TO DENO'MINATE. v. a. [denomino, Latin.]

To name; to give a name to.

The commendable purpose of consecration being not of every one understood, they have been construed as though they had superstitiously meant either that those places, which were denominated of angels and saints, should serve for the worship of so glorious creatures; or else those glorious creatures for defence, protection, and patronage of such places. Hooker.

Predestination is destructive to all that is established among men, to all that is most precious to human nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, understanding and will; for what use can we have of our understandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? And, if we act not voluntarily, what exercise have we for our wills? Hammond.

DENOMINATION. n. f. [denominatio, Latin.] A name given to a thing, which commonly marks some principal quality of it.

But is there any token, denomination, or monument of the Gauls yet remaining in Ireland, as there is of the Scythians? Spenser.

The liking or disliking of the people gives the play the denomination of good or bad; but does not really make or constitute it such. Dryd.

Philosophy, the great idol of the learned part of the heathen world, has divided it into many sects and denominations; as Stoicks, Peripateticks, Epicureans, and the like. South.

All men are sinners: the most righteous among us must confess ourselves to come under that denomination. Rogers.

DENO'MINATIVE. adj. [from denominate.]

1. That gives a name; that confers a distinct appellation.

2. That obtains a distinct appellation. This would be more analogically denominable.

The least denominative part of time is a minute, the greatest integer being a year. Cocker.

DENOMINATOR. n. f. [from denominate.]

The giver of a name; the person or thing that causes an appellation.

Both the seas of one name should have one common denominator. Brown.

DENOMINATOR of a Fraction, is the number below the line, shewing the nature and quality of the parts which any integer is supposed to be divided into: thus in  $\frac{5}{8}$ , 8 the denominator shews you, that the integer is supposed to be divided into 8 parts, or half quarters; and the numerator 6 shews, that you take 6 of such parts, i. e. three quarters of the whole. Harris.

When a single broken number or fraction hath for its denominator a number consisting of an unit, in the first place towards the left hand, and nothing but cyphers from the unit towards the right hand, it is then more aptly and rightly called a decimal fraction. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Denominator of any proportion, is the quotient arising from the division of the antecedent by the consequent: thus 6 is the denominator of the proportion that 30 hath to 5, because 5) 30 (6. This is also called the exponent of the proportion, or ratio. Harris.

In all sorts of reasoning, the connexion and dependance of ideas should be followed, till the mind is brought to the source on which it bottoms. Locke.
3. Concatenation; connexion; relation of one thing to another.
Every moment we feel our dependance upon God, and find that we can neither be happy without him, nor think ourselves so. Tillotson.
4. State of being at the disposal or under the sovereignty of another: with upon.
Never was there a prince bereaved of his dependancies by his council, except where there hath been either an over-greatness in one counsellor, or an over-strict combination in divers. Bacon.
5. The things of persons of which any man has the dominion or disposal.
The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependancies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances. Swift.
6. Reliance; trust; confidence.
Their dependancies on him were drowned in this conceit. Hooker.
They slept in peace by night,
Secure of bread, as of returning light;
And with such firm dependance on the day,
That need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray. Dryden.
7. Accident; that of which the existence presupposes the existence of something else.
Modes I call such complex ideas, which, however compounded, contain not in them the supposition of subsisting by themselves, but are considered as dependancies on, or affections of, substances; such are the ideas signified by the words triangle, gratitude, murder. Locke.
- DEPENDANT. adj. [from depend.]
1. Hanging down.
2. Relating to something previous.
3. In the power of another.
On God, as the most high, all inferior causes in the world are dependant. Hooker.
- DEPENDANT. n. f. [from depend.] One who lives in subjection, or at the discretion of another; a retainer.
A great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter. Shakspeare.
For a fix-clerk a person recommended a dependant upon him, who paid six thousand pounds ready money. Clarendon.
His dependants shall quickly become his profligates. South.
- DEPENDENCE. } n. f. [from dependeo,

1. A thing or person at the disposal or discretion of another.
We invade the rights of our neighbours, not upon account of covetousness, but of dominion, that we may create dependencies. Collier.

2. State of being subordinate, or subject in some degree to the discretion of another; the contrary to sovereignty.
Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakspeare.
At their setting out they must have their commission, or letters patent, from the king, that so they may acknowledge their dependency upon the crown of England. Bacon.

3. That which is not principal; that which is subordinate.
We speak of the sublunary worlds, this earth, and its dependencies, which rose out of a chaos about six thousand years ago. Burnet.
4. Concatenation; connexion; rise of consequents from premises.
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense;
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As ne'er I heard in madness. Shakspeare.
5. Relation of any thing to another, as of an effect to its cause.
I took pleasure to trace out the cause of effects, and the dependence of one thing upon another in the visible creation. Burnet.
6. Trust; reliance; confidence.
The expectation of the performance of our desire, is that we call dependence upon him for help and assistance. Stillington.
- DEPENDENT. adj. [from dependens, Latin.]
This, as many other words of like termination, are written with ent or ant, as they are supposed to flow from the Latin or French.] Hanging down.
In the time of Charles the Great, and long since, the whole furs in the tails were dependent; but now that fashion is left, and the spots only worn, without the tails. Peacham.
- DEPENDENT. n. f. [from dependens, Latin.]
One subordinate; one at the discretion or disposal of another.
We are indigent, defenceless beings; the creatures of his power, and the dependents of his providence. Rogers.
- DEPENDER. n. f. [from depend.] A dependent; one that reposes on the kindness or power of another.
What shalt thou expect,
To be depend' on a thing that leans? Shakspeare.
- DEPERDITION. n. f. [from deperditus, Latin.] Loss; destruction.
It may be unjust to place all efficacy of gold in the non-omission of weights, or deperdition of any ponderous particles. Brown.
- DEPHLEGMA'TION. n. f. [from dephlegm.] An operation which takes away from the phlegm any spirituous fluid by repeated distillation, till it is at length left all behind. Quincy.
In divers cases it is not enough to separate the aqueous parts by dephlegmation; for some liquors contain also an unsuspected quantity of small corpuscles, of somewhat an earthy nature, which, being associated with the saline ones, do clog and blunt them, and thereby weaken their activity. Boyle.
- To DEPHLE'GM. } v. a. [de-
To DEPHLE'GMATE. } phlegmo, low
Latin.] To clear from phlegm, or aqueous insipid matter.
We have sometimes taken spirit of salt, and carefully dephlegmed it. Boyle.
- DEPHLE'GMEDNESS. n. f. [from dephlegm.] The quality of being freed from phlegm or aqueous matter.
The proportion betwixt the coralline solution and the spirit of wine, depends so much upon the strength of the former liquor, and the dephlegmedness of the latter, that it is scarce possible to determine generally and exactly what quantity of each ought to be taken. Boyle.

To DEPI'CT. v. a. [from depingo, depictum, Latin.]

1. To paint; to portray; to represent in colours.
The cowards of Lacedemon depicted upon their shields the most terrible beasts they could imagine. Taylor.
2. To describe; to represent an action to the mind.
When the distractions of a tumult are sensibly depicted, every object and every occurrence are so presented to your view, that while you read, you seem indeed to see them. Felton.
- DEPI'LATORY. n. f. [from de and pilus, Latin.] An application used to take away hair.
- DE'PILOUS. adj. [from de and pilus, Latin.] Without hair.

DEPO'NENT. n. f. [from depono, Latin.]

1. One that deposes his testimony in a court of justice; an evidence; a witness.

2. [In grammar.] Such verbs as have no active voice are called deponents, and generally signify action only: as, fateor, I confess. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

To DEPOPULATE. v. a. [depopulo, Latin.] To unpeople; to lay waste; to destroy inhabited countries.

Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakespeare.

He turned his arms upon unarmed and unprovided people, to spoil only and depopulate, contrary to the laws both of war and peace. Bacon.

A land exhausted to the last remains,
Depopulated towns and driven plains. Dryden.

Grim death, in different shapes,
Depopulates the nations; thousands fall
His victims. Philips.

DEPOPULATION. n. f. [from depopulate.]

The act of unpeopling; havock; waste; destruction of mankind.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam! to behold
The end of all thy offspring, end so sad,
Depopulation! Thee another flood,
Of tears and sorrow a flood, thee also drown'd,
And sunk thee as thy sons. Milton.

Remote thou hear'st the dire effect of war,
Depopulation. Philips.

DEPOPULATOR. n. f. [from depopulate.]

A dispeopler; a destroyer of mankind; a waster of inhabited countries.

She Delia's self
In gait surpass'd, and goddess-like deport. Milt.
Of middle age one rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong. Milton.

DEPORTATION. n. f. [deportatio, Lat.]

1. Transportation; exile into a remote part of the dominion, with prohibition to change the place of residence.

2. Exile in general.

An abjuration, which is a deportation for ever into a foreign land, was anciently with us a civil death. Ayliffe.

DEPORTMENT. n. f. [deportement, Fr.]

1. Conduct; management; manner of acting.

I will but sweep the way with a few notes touching the duke's own deportment in that island. Wotton.

2. Demeanour; behaviour.

The coldness of his temper, and the gravity of his deportment, carried him safe through many difficulties, and he lived and died in a great station. Swift.

To DEPOSE. v. a. [depono, Latin.]

1. To lay down; to lodge; to let fall.

Its shores are neither advanced one jot further into the sea, nor its surface raised by additional mud deposited upon it by the yearly inundations of the Nile. Woodward.

2. To degrade from a throne or high station.

First of the king: what shall of him become?
—The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose. Shakespeare.

May your sick fame still languish till it die;
Then, as the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden.

Deposed consuls, and captive princes, might have preceded him. Tatler.

3. To take away; to divest; to strip of.

Not in use.

You may my glory and my state depose,
But not my griefs; still am I king of those. Shakespeare.

4. To give testimony; to attest.

'Twas he that made you to depose;
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous. Shak.

It was usual for him that dwelt in Southwark, or Tothill-street, to depose the yearly rent or valuation of lands lying in the north, or other remote part of the realm. Bacon.

5. To examine any one on his oath. Not in use.

According to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause. Shaksp.

To DEPOSE. v. n. To bear witness.

Love straight stood up and deposed, a lie could not come from the mouth of Zelmane. Sidney.

DEPOSITARY. n. f. [depositarius, Latin.]

One with whom any thing is lodged in trust.

I gave you all.
—Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation, to be follow'd
With such a number. Shakespeare.

To DEPOSITE. v. a. [depositum, Lat.]

1. To lay up; to lodge in any place.

The eagle got leave here to deposit her eggs.
L'Estrange.

Dryden wants a poor square foot of stone, to shew where the ashes of one of the greatest poets on earth are deposited. Garth.

When vessels were open, and the insects had free access to the aliment within them, Redi diligently observed, that no other species were produced, but of such as he saw go in and feed, and deposit their eggs there, which they would readily do in all putrefaction. Bentley.

2. To lay up as a pledge, or security.

3. To place at interest.

God commands us to return, as to him, to the poor, his gifts out of mere duty and thankfulness; not to deposit them with him in hopes of meriting by them. Spratt.

4. To lay aside.

The difficulty will be to persuade the depositing of those lusts which have, by I know not what fascination, so endeared themselves. Decay of Piety.

DEPOSITE. n. f. [depositum, Latin.]

1. Any thing committed to the trust and care of another.

2. A pledge; a pawn; a thing given as a security.

3. The state of a thing pawned or pledged.

They had since Marseilles, and fairly left it: they had the other day the Valtoline, and now have put it in deposite. Bacon.

DEPOSITION. n. f. [from depositio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving public testimony.

If you will examine the veracity of the fathers by those circumstances usually considered in depositions, you will find them strong on their side. Sir K. Digby.

A witness is obliged to swear, otherwise his deposition is not valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The act of degrading a prince from sovereignty.

3. [In canon-law.] Deposition properly signifies a solemn depriving of a man of his clerical orders. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEPOSITORY. n. f. [from deposite.] The place where any thing is lodged. Depository is properly used of persons, and depository of places; but in the following example they are confounded.

The Jews themselves are the depositories of all the prophecies which tend to their own confusion. Addison.

DEPRAVATION. n. f. [depravatio, Lat.]

1. The act of making any thing bad; the act of corrupting; corruption.

The three forms of government have their several perfections, and are subject to their several depravations: however, few states are ruined by defect in their institution, but generally by corruption of manners. Swift.

2. The state of being made bad; degeneracy; depravity.

We have a catalogue of the blackest sins that human nature, in its highest depravation, is capable of committing. South.

3. Defamation; censure: a sense not now in use.

Stubborn critics are apt, without a theme
For depravation, to square all the sex. Shaksp.

To DEPRAVE. v. a. [depravo, Latin.]

To vitiate; to corrupt; to contaminate.

We admire the providence of God in the continuance of scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics to deprave, the same. Hooker.

Who lives that's not depraved, or depraved? Shakespeare.

But from me what can proceed
But all corrupt, both mind and will deprav'd? Milton.

A taste which plenty does deprave,
Loaths lawful good, and lawless ill does crave. Dryden.

DEPRAVEDNESS. n. f. [from deprave.]

Corruption; taint; contamination; vitiated state.

What sins do you mean? Our original depravedness, and proneness of our eternal part to all evil. Hammond.

DEPRAVEMENT. n. f. [from deprave.]

A vitiated state; corruption.

He maketh men believe, that apparitions are either deceptions of sight, or melancholy depravements of fancy. Brown.

DEPRAYER. n. f. [from deprave.] A corrupter; he that causes depravity.

DEPRIVITY. n. f. [from deprave.] Corruption; a vitiated state.

To DEPRECATE. v. a.

1. To beg off; to pray deliverance from; to avert by prayer.

In deprecating of evil, we make an humble acknowledgment of guilt, and of God's justice in chastising, as well as clemency in sparing, the guilty. Grew.

Poverty indeed, in all its degrees, men are easily persuaded to deprecate from themselves. Rogers.

The judgments which we would deprecate are not removed. Smalridge.

The Italian entered them in his prayer: amongst the three evils he petitioned to be delivered from, he might have deprecated greater evils. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. To implore mercy of: this is not proper.

At length he sets
Those darts, whose points make gods adore
His might, and deprecate his power. Prior.

DEPRECATION. n. f. [deprecatio, Lat.]

1. Prayer against evil.

I, with leave of speech implor'd,
And humble deprecation, thus replied. Milton.
Sternutation they generally conceived to be a good sign, or a bad one; and so, upon this motion, they commonly used a gratulation for the one, and a deprecation for the other. Brown.

2. Intreaty; petitioning.

3. An excusing; a begging pardon for.

DEPRECATIVE. } adj. [from deprecate.]

DEPRECATORY. } That serves to deprecate; apologetick; tending to avert evil by supplication.

Bishop Fox understanding that the Scottish king was still discontent, being troubled that the occasion of breaking of the truce should grow from his men, sent many humble and depre-catory letters to the Scottish king to appease him.
Bacon.

DEPRECA'TOR. n. f. [deprecator, Latin.]

One that averts evil by petition.

To DEPRECIATE. v. a. [depreciare,
Latin.]

1. To bring a thing down to a lower price.

2. To undervalue.

They presumed upon that mercy, which, in all their conversations, they endeavour to depreciate and misrepresent. Addison.

As there are none more ambitious of fame, than those who are coiners in poetry, it is very natural for such as have not succeeded in it to depreciate the works of those who have.

Spektator.

To DE'PREDATE. v. a. [depredari,
Latin.]

1. To rob; to pillage.

2. To spoil; to devour.

It maketh the substance of the body more solid and compact, and so less apt to be consumed and depredated by the spirits. Bacon.

DEPREDATION. n. f. [depredatio, Latin.]

1. A robbing; a spoiling.

Commissioners were appointed to determine all matters of piracy and depredations between the subjects of both kingdoms. Hayward.

The land had never been before so free from robberies and depredations as through his reign.
Wotton.

Were there not one who had said, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no farther; we might well expect such vicissitudes, such clashing in nature, and such depredations and changes of sea and land. Woodward.

2. Voracity; waste.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in nothing more visible than in the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour, from glass, or the blade of a sword, or any such polished body. Bacon.

DEPREDATOR. n. f. [depredator, Latin.]

A robber; a devourer.

It is reported, that the shrub called our lady's seal, which is a kind of briony, and coleworts, set near together, one or both will die: the cause is, for that they be both great depredators of the earth, and one of them starveth the other.
Bacon.

We have three that collect the experiments, which are in all books; these we call depredators.
Bacon.

To DEPREHE'ND. v. a. [deprehendo,
Latin.]

1. To catch one; to take unawares; to take in the fact.

That wretched creature, being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

Who can believe men upon their own authority; that are once deprehended in so gross and impious an imposture? More.

2. To discover; to find out a thing; to come to the knowledge or understanding of.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies, which do so great effects, are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be de-prehended by experience. Bacon.

DEPREHENSIBLE. adj. [from deprehend.]

1. That may be caught.

2. That may be understood, or discovered. Diſt.

DEPREHE'NSIBLENESS. n. f.

1. Capableness of being caught.

2. Intelligibleness; easiness to be understood.

DEPREHE'NSION. n. f. [deprehensio, Latin.]

1. A catching or taking unawares.

2. A discovery.

To DEPRESS. v. a. [from depressus, of deprimo, Latin.]

1. To press or thrust down.

2. To let fall; to let down.

The same thing I have tried by letting a globe rest, and raising or depressing the eye, or otherwise moving it, to make the angle of a just magnitude. Newton.

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life. Addison.

Passion can depress or raise

The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRESSIO. n. f. [depressio, Latin.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Bricks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that,
in respect of them, even surfaces, that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protu-berances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wise man.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe. Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra] is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division. Diſt.

DEPRESSION of a Star [with astronomers] is the distance of a star from the horizon below, and is measured by the arch of the verticle circle or azimuth, passing through the star, intercepted between the star and the horizon. Diſt.

DEPRESSOR. n. f. [depressor, Latin.]

1. He that keeps or presses down.

2. An oppressor.

DEPRESSOR. [In anatomy.] A term

given to several muscles of the body, whose action is to depress the parts to which they adhere.

DEPRIMENT. adj. [from deprimens, of deprimo, Latin.] An epithet applied to one of the straight muscles that move the globe or ball of the eye, its use being to pull it downward.

The exquisite equilibration of all opposite and antagonist muscles is effected partly by the natural posture of the body and the eye, which is the case of the attollent and depriment muscles.
Derham.

DEPRIVATION. n. f. [from de and privatio, Latin.]

1. The act of depriving, or taking away from.

2. The state of losing.

Fools whose end is destruction, and eternal deprivation of being. Bentley.

DEPRIVATION [in law] is when a cler-gyman, as a bishop, parson, vicar, or pre-bend, is deprived, or deposed from his preferment, for any matter in fact or law. Phillips.

To DEPRIVE. v. a. [from de and privo, Latin.]

1. To bereave one of a thing; to take it away from him: with of.

God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding. Job.

He lamented the loss of an excellent servant, and the horrid manner in which he had been deprived of him. Clarendon.

Now wretched Oedipus, deprived of sight,
Led a long death in everlasting night. Pope.

2. To hinder; to debar from: Milton uses it without of.

From his face I shall be hid, deprived
His blessed countenance. Milton.

The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew
Deprived of sepulchres and fun'ral due. Dryden.

3. To release; to free from.

Most happy he,
Whose least delight sufficeth to deprive Remembrance of all pains which him oppress. Spenser.

4. To put out of an office.

A minister, deprived for inconformity, said, that if they deprived him, it should cost an hundred men's lives. Bacon.

DEPTH. n. f. [from deep, of diep, Dut.]

1. Deepness; the measure of any thing from the surface downward.

As for men, they had buildings in many places higher than the depth of the water. Bacon.

We have large and deep caves of several depths: the deepest are sunk six hundred fathoms.
Bacon.

The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryd.
For tho', in nature, depth and height

Are equally held infinite;
In poetry the height we know,
'Tis only infinite below. Swift.

2. Deep place; not a shoal.

The false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

3. The abyss; a gulf of infinite profundity.

When he prepared the heavens I was there, when he set a compass upon the face of the depth.
Proverbs.

4. The middle or height of a season.

And in the depth of winter, in the night,
You plough the raging seas to coasts unknown. Denham.

The earl of Newcastle, in the depth of winter, rescued the city of York from the rebels. Clarendon.

5. Abstruseness; obscurity.

There are greater depths and obscurities in an elaborate and well-written piece of nonsense, than in the most abstruse tract of school-divinity. Addison's Whig Examiner.

DEPTH of a Squadron or Battalion, is the number of men in the file. Milit. Dict.

To DEPTHEN. v. a. [diepen, Dutch.]

To deepen, or make deeper. Dict.

To DEPU'CELATE. v. a. [depuceler, Fr.]

To deslour; to bereave of virginity. Dict.

DEPU'LSION. n. f. [depulsio, Lat.] A beating or thrusting away.

DEPU'LSORY. adj. [from depulsus, Lat.] Putting away; averting. Dict.

To DEPURATE. v. a. [depurer, Fr. from depurgo, Lat.] To purify; to cleanse; to free any thing from its impurities.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and in some measure to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chemical experiments we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ. Boyle.

DEPURATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Cleaned; freed from dregs and impurities.

2. Pure; not contaminated.

Neither can any boast a knowledge depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh. Glanville.

DEPURA'TION. n. f. [depuratio, Latin.]

1. The act of separating the pure from the impure part of any thing.

Brimstone is a mineral body, of fat and inflammable parts; and this is either used crude, and called sulphur vive; or is of a sadder colour, and, after deputation, such as we have in magdeleons, or rolls of a lighter yellow. Brown.

What hath been hitherto discoursed, inclines us to look upon the ventilation and deputation of the blood as one of the principal and constant uses of respiration. Boyle.

2. The cleansing of a wound from its matter.

To DEPU'RE. v. a. [depurer, French.]

1. To cleanse; to free from impurities.

2. To purge; to free from some noxious quality.

It produced plants of such imperfection and harmful quality, as the waters of the general flood could not so wash out or depure, but that the same defection hath had continuance in the very generation and nature of mankind. Raleigh.

DEPUTA'TION. n. f. [deputation, French.]

1. The act of deputing, or sending away with a special commission.

2. Vicegerency; the possession of any commission given.

Cut me off the heads
Of all the fav'rites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war. Shaksp.

He looks not below the moon, but hath designed the regiment of sublunary affairs into sublunary deputations. Brown.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

To DEPUTE. v. a. [deputer, Fr.] To send with a special commission; to empower one to transact instead of another.

And Absalom said unto him, See thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear. 2 Samuel.

And Ilinus thus, deputed by the rest,
The heroes welcome and their thanks express'd. Recommon.

A bishop, by deputing a priest or chaplain to administer the sacraments, may remove him. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEPUTY. n. f. [deputé, French; from deputatus, Latin.]

1. A lieutenant; a viceroy; one that is appointed by a special commission to govern or act instead of another.

He exerciseth dominion over them as the vicegerent and deputy of Almighty God. Hale.

He was vouch'd his immediate deputy upon earth, and viceroy of the creation, and lord lieutenant of the world. South.

2. Any one that transacts business for another.

Presbyters, absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies, who, in their stead, did but read homilies. Hooker.

A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are, as it were, granted to him and his deputy; for he may exercise them by his friend. Bacon.

3. [In law.] One that exercises any office or other thing in another man's right, whose forfeiture or misdemeanour shall cause the officer or person for whom he acts to lose his office. Phillips.

To DEQUA'NTITATE. v. a. [from de and quantitas, Latin.] To diminish the quantity of.

This we affirm of pure gold; for that which is current, and passeth in stamp amongst us, by reason of its alloy, which is a proportion of silver or copper mixed therewith, is actually dequantitated by fire, and possibly by frequent extinction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DER. A term used in the beginning of names of places. It is generally to be derived from deon, a wild beast, unless the place stands upon a river; for then it may rather be fetched from the British dur, i. e. water. Gibson's Camden.

To DERA'CINATE. v. a. [deraciner, Fr.]

1. To pluck or tear up by the roots.

Her fallow lees
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery. Shaksp.

2. To abolish; to destroy; to extirpate.

To DERA'IGN. } v. a. [disrationare, or

To DERA'IN. } dirationare, Latin.]

1. To prove; to justify.

When the parson of any church is disturbed to demand tythes in the next parish by a writ of indicavit, the patron shall have a writ to demand the advowson of the tythes being in demand; and when it is deraigned, then shall the plea pass in the court christian, as far forth as it is deraigned in the king's court. Blount.

2. To disorder; to turn out of course. Dict.

DERA'IGNMENT. } n. f. [from deraign.]

DERA'INMENT. }

1. The act of deraigning or proving.

2. A disordering or turning out of course.

3. A discharge of profession; a departure out of religion.

In some places the substantive deraignment is used in the very literal signification with the French disfrayer, or desfranger; that is, turning out of course, displacing, or setting out of order;

as, deraignment or departure out of religion, and deraignment or discharge of their profession, which is spoken of those religious men who forsook their orders and professions. Blount.

1. Tumult; disorder; noise.

2. Merriment; jollity; solemnity. Not in use. Douglass.

To DERE. v. a. [dejuan, Sax.] To hurt. Obsolete. Some think that in the example it means daring.

So from immortal race he does proceed,
That mortal hands may not withstand his might;
Died for his derring doe, and bloody deed;
For all in blood and spoil is his delight. F. Queen.

DERELICTION. n. f. [derelictio, Latin.]

1. The act of forsaking or leaving; abandonment.

2. The state of being forsaken.

There is no other thing to be looked for, but the effects of God's most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.

DERELICTS. n. f. pl. [In law.] Goods wilfully thrown away, or relinquished, by the owner. Dict.

To DERIDE. v. a. [derideo, Lat.] To laugh at; to mock; to turn to ridicule; to scorn.

Before such presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they who most reprehend or deride what we do. Hooker.

What shall be the portion of those who have derided God's word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred and religious? Tillotson.

These sons, ye gods, who with flagitious pride Insult my darkness, and my groans deride. Pope.
Some, that adore Newton for his fluxions,
deride him for his religion. Berkley.

DERIDER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mocker; a scoffer.

Upon the wilful violation of oaths, execrable blasphemies, and like contempts offered by deriders of religion, fearful tokens of divine revenge have been known to follow. Hooker.

2. A droll; a buffoon.

DERISION. n. f. [derisio, Latin.]

I am in derision daily; every one mocketh me. Jeremiah.

Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us. Psalms.

Ensnar'd, assaulted, overcome; led bound,
Thy foes derision, captive, poor, and blind,
Into a dungeon thrust. Milton.

DERISIVE. adj. [from deride.] Mocking; scoffing.

O'er all the dome they quaff, they feast;
Derisive taunts were spread from guest to guest,
And each in jovial mood his mate address'd. Pope.

DERISORY. adj. [derisorius, Lat.] Mocking; ridiculing.

DERIVABLE. adj. [from derive.] Attainable by right of descent or derivation.

God has declared this the eternal rule and standard of all honour derivable upon me, that those who honour him shall be honoured by him. South.

DERIVATION. n. f. [derivatio, Latin.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Burnet.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Locke.

3. The transmission of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman.

5. The thing deduced or derived. Not used.

Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to. Glanville.

DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Latin.]

Derived or taken from another.

As it is a derivative perfection, so it is a distinct kind of perfection from that which is in God. Hale.

DERIVATIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

The thing or word derived or taken from another.

For honour,
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. Shakspeare.

In a derivative manner.

To DERIVE. v. a. [deriver, Fr. from derivo, Latin.]

1. To turn the course of water from its channel.

Company lessens the shame of vice by sharing it, and abates the torrent of a common odium by deriving it into many channels. South.

2. To deduce; as from a root, from a cause, from a principle.

They endeavour to derive the varieties of colours from the various proportion of the direct progress or motion of these globules to their circumvolution, or motion about their own centre. Boyle.

Men derive their ideas of duration from their reflection on the train of ideas they observe to succeed one another in their own understandings. Locke.

From these two causes of the laxity and rigidity of the fibres, the methodists, an ancient set of physicians, derived all diseases of human bodies with a great deal of reason; for the fluids derive their qualities from the solids. Arbuthnot.

3. To communicate to another, as from the origin and source.

Christ having Adam's nature as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from his own person, unto all that belong unto him. Hooker.

4. To receive by transmission.

This property seems rather to have been derived from the pretorian soldiers. Decay of Piety.

The censers of these wretches, who, I am sure, could derive no sanctity to them from their own persons; yet upon this account, that they had been consecrated by the offering incense in them, were, by God's special command, sequestered from all common use. South.

5. To communicate to by descent of blood.

Besides the readiness of parts, an excellent disposition of mind is derived to your lordship from the parents of two generations, to whom I have the honour to be known. Felton.

6. To spread; to diffuse gradually from one place to another.

The streams of the publick justice were derived into every part of the kingdom. Davies.

7. [In grammar.] To trace a word from its origin.

To DERIVE. v. n.

1. To come from; to owe its origin to.

He that resists the power of Ptolemy,
Resists the pow'r of heav'n; for pow'r from heav'n

Derives, and monarchs rule by gods appointed. Prior.

2. To descend from.

I am, my lord, as well deriv'd as he,
As well possist. Shakspeare.

DERIVER. n. f. [from derive.] One that draws or fetches, as from the source or principle.

Such a one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole intire guilt of them to himself. South.

DERN. adj. [dearn, Saxon.]

1. Sad; solitary.

2. Barbarous; cruel. Obsolete.

DERNIE'R. adj. Last. It is a mere French word, and used only in the following phrase.

In the Imperial Chamber, the term for the prosecution of an appeal is not circumscribed by the term of one or two years, as the law elsewhere requires in the empire; this being the dernier resort and supreme court of judicature. Ayliffe.

To DE'ROGATE. v. a. [derogo, Latin.]

1. To do an act so far contrary to a law or custom, as to diminish its former extent: distinguished from abrogate.

By several contrary customs and styles used here, many of those civil and canon laws are controuled and derogated. Hale.

2. To lessen the worth of any person or thing; to disparage.

To DE'ROGATE. v. n.

1. To detract; to lessen reputation: with from.

We should be injurious to virtue itself, if we did derogate from them whom their industry hath made great. Hooker.

2. To degenerate; to act beneath one's rank, or place, or birth.

Is there no derogation in 't?
—You cannot derogate, my lord. Shakspeare.

DE'ROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakspeare's K. Lear.

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no dispraise. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.]

Detracting; lessening the honour of. Not in use.

That spirits are corporeal, seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.]

In a detracting manner. Dict.

DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Dict.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.]

Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

DERVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A

Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sandys.

DE'SCANT. n. f. [discento, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakspeare.

The wakeful nightingale
All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakspeare.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren.

To DE'SCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.

2. Todiscourse at large; to make speeches:
in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakspeare.
Com'it thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict?
Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleased to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvassed and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

To DESCEND. v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To go downward; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came,
and the winds blew, and beat upon that house;
and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock.
Matthew.

The brook that descended out of the mount.

He cleft his head with one descending blow.

Foul with stains

Of gushing torrents and descending rains. Addison.
O goddess! who, descending from the skies,
Vouchsaf'd thy presence to my wond'ring eyes.

The Grecian fleet descending on the town. Dryden.

A foreign son upon the shore descends,
Whose martial fame from pole to pole extends.

6. To proceed as from an original; to be derived from.

Despair descends from a mean original; the offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience.

Will. is younger brother to a baronet, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles.

7. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate, of the father ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance. Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

8. To extend a discourse from general to particular considerations.

Congregations discerned the small accord that was among themselves, when they descended to particulars. Decay of Piety.

To DESCEND. v. a. To walk downward upon any place.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;
Descended Adam to the bow'r, where Eve Lay sleeping. Milton.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road.

This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison.

DESCENDANT. n. s. [descendant, French; descendens, Latin.] The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation, at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,
Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will, and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them. Atterbury.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin.]
It seems to be established, that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regrefs of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray on the Creation.

2. Proceeding from another, as an original or ancestor.

More than mortal grace
Speaks thee descendent of etherial race. Pope.

DESCENDIBLE. adj. [from descend.]
1. Such as may be descended; such as may admit of a passage downward.

2. Transmissible by inheritance.

According to the customs of other countries, those honorary fees and infeudations were descen-dible to the eldest, and not to all the males.

DESCENSION. n. s. [descensio, Latin.]
1. The act of going downward, falling, or sinking; descent.

2. A declension; a degradation.

From a god to a bull! a heavy descension:
It was Jove's case. From a prince to a 'prentice!
a low transformation; that shall be mine.

3. [In astronomy.] Right descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign or star below the horizon of a direct sphere.

Oblique descension is the arch of the equator, which descends with the sign below the horizon of an oblique sphere. Ozanam.

DESCENSIONAL. adj. [from descension.]
Relating to descent.

DESCENT. n. s. [descensus, Latin; descente,
French.]

1. The act of passing from a higher to a lower place.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent? Blackmore.

2. Progress downward.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Woodward.

4. Lowest place.

From th' extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy feet. Shak.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.

O foul descent, that I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom: in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not im-mured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Rhee, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Clarendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Controul those soplings, and declare for sense;
For, should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair. Dryden.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made. Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my master's heirs in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakspeare.

Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen.

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton.

From him
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy;
a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hooker.

Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd,
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd,
Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd.

12. A rank in the scale of subordination.

How have I then with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee? Milton.

To DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Lat.]

1. To delineate; to mark out; to trace; as a torch waved about the head describes a circle.

2. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.

I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my affection.

He that writes well in verse will often send his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that so he may comport with the measures of the rhyme, or with his own most beautiful and vivid sentiments of the thing he describes.

3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.

Men passed through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book. Joshua.

4. To define in a lax manner by the promiscuous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.

DESCRIBER. n. s. [from describe.] He that describes.

From a plantation and colony, an island near Spain was by the Greek describers named Erythra.

DESCRIBER. n. f. [from the verb.] A discoverer; a detector.

The glad descrier shall not miss
To taste the nectar of a kiss. Craslow.

DESCRIPTION. n. f. [descriptio, Lat.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.

Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,

That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still.

Addison.

3. A lax definition.

The sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watts.

4. The qualities expressed in a description.

I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakspeare.

TO DESCRIBE. v. a. [descriere, Fr.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered: as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.
And the house of Joseph sent to descrie Bethel. Judges.

Edmund, I think, is gone to descrie
The strength o' th' enemy. Shakspeare.

Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to descrie the seas. Abbot.

3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.

Of the king they got a sight after dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table; in neither place descried, no, not by Cadinet, who had been lately ambassador in England. Wotton.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye; to see any thing distant or obscure.

Thus dight, into the court he took his way;
Both through the guard, which never him descried,
And through the watchmen, who him never spied. Hubbard's Tale.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath;
What's past, and what's to come she can descrie. Shakspeare.

That planet would, unto our eyes, descriing
only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horned, as the moon seems. Raleigh.

And now their way to earth they had descried,
To Paradise first tending. Milton.

Although the motion of light be not descried, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body. Digby.

A tow'r so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could descrie
All Ilium. Denham.

Once more at least look back, said I;
Thyself in that large glass descrie. Prior.

DESCRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery; thing discovered.

How near 's the other army?

—Near, and on speedy foot, the main desery
Stands in the hourly thought. Shakspeare.

TO DESECRATE. v. a. [desacro, Lat.]

To divert from the purpose to which any thing is consecrated.

The founders of monasteries imprecated evil on those who should desecrate their donations.

Salmon's Survey.

DESECRATION. n. f. [from desecrate.]

The abolition of consecration.

DE'SERT. n. f. [desertum, Lat.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
If trembling I inhibit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Shakspeare.

He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades.

Milton.

DE'SERT. adj. [desertus, Latin.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untill'd.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakspeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuteronomy.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

TO DESE'RT. v. a. [deserter, French; desero, Latin.]

1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.

I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden.

2. To leave; to abandon.

What is it that hords and keeps the orbs in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them? Bentley.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

DESE'RT. n. f. [properly deffert: the word is originally French.] The last course; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESE'RT.

DESE'RT. n. f. [from deserve.]

1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired. Hooker.

The base o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states. Shakspeare.
Use every man after his desert, and who shall
'scape whipping? Shakspeare.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.

All desert imports an equality between the good conferred, and the good deserved, or made due. South.

3. Excellence; right of reward; virtue.

More to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakspeare.

DESE'RTER. n. f. [from desert.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post: commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and outed of their places in parliament. King Charles.

Streight to their ancient cells, recall'd from air,

The reconcil'd deserters will repair. Dryden.

Hosts of deserters, who your honour sold,
And basely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy's. Decay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garrison is brought to the utmost necessity. Tatler.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus. Dryden.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood. Pope.

DESE'RTION. n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other. Rogers.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some stinging affliction. South.

DESE'RTLESS. adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

She said she lov'd,
Lov'd me desertless; who with shame confest,
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast. Dryden.

TO DESERVE. v. a. [deservir, Fr.] To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease, as men deserved of them. Hooker.

Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name. Shakspeare.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakspeare.

What he deserves of you and me I know. Shakspeare.

Yet well, if here would end
The misery: I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings. Milton.

A mother cannot give him death: though he Deserves it, he deserves it not from me. Dryden.

Since my Orazia's death I have not seen
A beauty so deserving to be queen. Dryden.

TO DESERVE. v. n. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice, one man may merit and deserve of another. South.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,

Where the deserving ought to rise. Otway.

He had been a person of great deservings from the republick, was an admirable speaker, and very popular. Swift.

DESE'RVEDLY. adv. [from deserve.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and base,
Deservedly made vassal. Milton.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert. Addison.

DESE'RVING. n. f. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his defects are pass'd. Shakspeare.
Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers
o, perchance, grow intolerable presumers.

Wotton.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers. Dryden.

DESICCANTS. n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of fores;
driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and wailed. Wifeman.

TO DESICCATE. v. a. [desicco, Lat.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores. Bacon.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate
the moisture. Bacon.

DESICCATION. n. f. [from desiccate.]

The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there fol-loweth desiccation, induration, and consumption.

Bacon.

DESICCATIVE. adj. [from desiccate.]

That has the power of drying.

TO DESIDERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.]

To want; to miss; to desire in absence.

A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much desiderate problem. Cheyne.

DESIDERATUM. [Latin.] Somewhat which inquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation. The tri-section of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDIOSE. adj. [desidiosus, Lat.] Idle; lazy; heavy. Dist.

TO DESIGN. v. a. [designo, Lat. dessiner, French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose; with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely designed for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillingfleet.

You are not for obscurity design'd,

But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of those places was designed by the old man to his son. Clarendon.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune: he was designed to the study of the law.

Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well designed; then, whether it be well coloured; which be the two general heads.

Wotton.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the lines. Dryd.

5. To mark out by particular tokens.
Little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke.

DESIGN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A sedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals, one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.]

Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited:
the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Digby.

DESIGNATION. n. f. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marlborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a pitilary pretence, grounded upon the will and desig- nation of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently; not fortuitously.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour.

Locke.

DESIGNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes;
a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private.

Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESIGNING. participial adj. [from design.]

Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; frau-dulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,

Designing, mercenary; and I know

You would not wish to think I could be bought.

Southern.

DESIGNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknow-ing; inadvertent.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.]

Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers. Boyle.

DESIGNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords! our wars are done!

The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakspeare.

She received advice both of the king's desperate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvass; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
Forthough that some mean artist's skill were shown

In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own.

Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great fagacity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought.

Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of this will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes.

Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. desio, Ital.]

desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it.

Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakspeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind.

Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the fort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French;
desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold.

Deut.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.
Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.
3. To ask; to intreat.
Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakspeare.
But since you take such int'rest in our woe,
And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last and fatal night befel. Dryden.
4. To require; to demand. Not in use.
A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments Spenser.
- DESI'RER. n. s. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.
I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakspeare.
- DESI'ROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.
The same piety which maketh them that are in authority desirous to please and resemble God by justice, inflameth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker.
Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are
deceitful meat. Proverbs.
Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch.
Bacon.
Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland. Milton.
Conjugal affection,
Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold
Once more thy face. Milton.
- DESI'ROUSLY. adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly;
with desire; with ardent wishes.
- DESI'ROUSNESS. n. s. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Diſt.
- To DESI'ST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop: with
from.
Desist, thou art discern'd,
And toil'st in vain; nor me in vain molest.
Milton.
There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.
- DESI'STANCE. n. s. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.
Men usually give freeliest where they have not given before: and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more,
that they have given already. Boyle.
- DESI'TIVE. adj. [desitus, Latin.] Ending; concludent; final.
Inceptive and desitive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts.
- DESK. n. s. [disch, a table, Dutch.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.
Tell her in the desk,
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakspeare.
He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Walton's Angler.
I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.
Not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.
- DE'SOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Latin.]
1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.
Let us seek some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakspeare.

- This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broome.
2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.
This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer.
3. Solitary; without society.
To DE'SOLATE. v. a. [desolo, Latin.]
To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.
The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.
Thick around
Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun,
And dog impatient bounding at the shot,
Worse than the season desolate the fields. Thomson.
- DE'SOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.
- DE'SOLATION. n. s. [from desolate.]
1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.
What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion. Spenser.
Without her follows to myself and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakspeare.
2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy;
destitution.
That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind;
and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sidney.
Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation.
Shakspeare.
My desolation does begin to make
A better life. Shakspeare.
To complete
The scene of desolation, stretch'd around
The grim guards stand. Thomson.
3. A place wasted and forsaken.
How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jer.
- DESPA'IR. n. s. [desespoir, French.]
1. Hopelessness; despondence; loss of hope.
Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds; sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke.
You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or never discovered it, stooped with despair. Sidney.
We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed;
we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor.
Wearied, forsaken, and pursued at last,
All safety in despair of safety plac'd,
Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denham.
Equal their flame, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair.
Dryden.
2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.
Strangely visited people,
All swollen and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye;
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakspeare.
3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.
Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spratt.
- To DESPA'IR. v. n. [despero, Latin.] To be without hope; to despond; with of before a noun.

- Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend yet despair not; for there may be a turning. Ecclus.
- We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.
Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun. Wake.
- DESPA'IRER. n. s. [from despair.] One without hope.
He cheers the fearful, and commends the
bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success. Dryden.
- DESPA'IRFUL. adj. [despair and full.] Hopeless. Obsolete.
That sweet but sour despairful care. Sidney.
Other cries amongst the Irish favour of the Seythian barbarism; as the lamentations of their burials, with despairful outcries. Spenser.
- DESPA'IRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.]
In a manner betokening hopelessness or despondency.
He speaks severely and despairingly of our society. Boyle.
- To DESPA'TCH. v. a. [depeſcher, Fr.]
1. To send away hastily.
Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it. Temple.
The good Aeneas, whose paternal care
Iulus' absence could no longer bear,
Despatch'd Achaes to the ships in haste,
To give a glad relation of the past. Dryden.
2. To send out of the world; to put to death.
Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His knighted life. Shakspeare.
And the company shall stone them with stones,
and despatch them with their swords. Ezek.
In combating, but two of you will fall;
And we resolve we will despatch you all. Dryden.
Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;
I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryden.
3. To perform a business quickly: as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.
Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him. 2 Mac.
No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work. Locke.
4. To conclude an affair with another.
What, are the brothers parted?
—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone. Shakspeare.
- DESPA'TCH. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.
Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.
You'd see, could you her inward motions
watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meaning would you look,
Then read her backward. Granville.
The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself. Addison.
2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.
You shall put
This night's great business into my despatch, Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakspeare.
3. Express; hasty messenger or message:
as, despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.]
Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead
A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DE'SPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile she hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shaksp.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel,
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure,
Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shaksp.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond.

3. Irretrievable; unsurmountable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shaksp.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hotbrained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to with his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery?
Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desp'rate fots and fools,
That durst depart from Aristotle's rules. Pope.

DE'SPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,
And desp'rately are dead. Shaksp.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. In a great degree; violently: this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Addison.

DE'SPERATENESS. n. f. [from desperate.]

Madness; fury; precipitance.

The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. f. [from desperate.]

Hopelessness; despair; despondency.

Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shaksp.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success chills all our industry, and we sin on because we have sinned. Hammond.

DESPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Lat.]

Contemptible; vile; mean; fordid;

worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears
Of despicable foes. Milton.

All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
Than when my name shook Africk with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Addison.

DE'SPICABLENESS. n. f. [from despicable.]
Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.

We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piety.

DE'SPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.]

Meanly; fordidly; vilely.

Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPISABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courtier, commonly the most despicable thing in the world. Arbuthnot to Pope.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French, Skinner; despicio, Latin.]

1. To scorn; to condemn; to flight; to disrespect.

For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men. Jer.

My sons their old unhappy fire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakspere it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspere.

DESPISER. n. f. [from despise.] Contemner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress,
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakspere.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified
even of her despisers. Gru. of Tongue.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPITE. n. f. [spijt, Dutch; dépit, French.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.

Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shaksp.

With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

2. Defiance; unobdient opposition.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakspere.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakspere.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryden.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milt.

TO DESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.

Saturn, with his wife Rhea, fled by night;
setting the town on fire, to despite Bacchus. Raleigh.

DESPITEFUL. adj. [despite and full.]

Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakspere.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Meanwhile the heinous and despiteful act
Of Satan, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPITEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.]

Maliciously; malignantly.

Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew.

DESPITEFULNESS. n. f. [from despiteful.]

Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisdom.

DESPITEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. Out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spied

Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door. Shakspere.

DESPITEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.]

In a furious manner. Not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls, That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls. Spenser.

TO DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Lat.]

1. To rob; to deprive: with of.

Despoil'd of warlike arms, and known shield. Spenser.

You are nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life. Shaksp.

He waits, with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of blifs. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,

Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune Defends not the sad hour. Philips.

2. To divest by any accident.

These formed stones, despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

3. Simply to strip. Not in use.

A groom can despoil
Of puissant arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser.

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from despolio, Lat.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

TO DESPOND. v. a. [despondeo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation.
L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:
The learned leaches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art.
Dryden.

Others depreß their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.
Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind.
Watts.

DESPO'NDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.]
Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPO'NDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.]
Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent
wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock.
Thomson.

TO DESPO'NSATE. v. a. [desponso, Lat.] To betroth; to affiancé; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPONSA'TION. n. f. [from desponsate.]
The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DE'SPOT. n. f. [δεσποτης.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince: as, the despot of Servia.

DESPO'TICAL. adj. [from despot.] Ab-DESPO'TICK. adj. Absolute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unac-countable.

God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lowre.
Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and despotic South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotic prince;
for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swifs and Grisons, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patriots were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotic slavery. Swift.

DESPO'TICALNESS. n. f. [from despotic- cal.] Absolute authority.

DE'SPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French;
from despot.] Absolute power.

TO DESPUMATE. v. n. [despumo, Latin.] To throw off parts in foam; to froth; to work.

DESPUMA'TION. n. f. [from despumate.]
The act of throwing off excrementi-tious parts in scum or foam.

DESQUAMA'TION. n. f. [from squama,
Lat.] The act of scaling fowl bones.
A term of chirurgery.

DESSERT. n. f. [desserte, French.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art
To make a supper with a fine dessert. Dryden.
At your dessert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

TO DE'STINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]
To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are destinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Ray.

DESTINA'TION. n. f. [from destinate.]
The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular destinations without losing their way.
Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the destination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

TO DE'STINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]
1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?
Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more?
Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Drench'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice.
Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.
Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are destin'd to carry humours secreted from the blood. Arbuthnot.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or misery: used absolutely.

May heav'n around this destin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r
From the dark urn shall throw thy destin'd hour.
Prior.

DE'STINY. n. f. [destinée, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy fire or dam;
But, like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided. Shakspeare.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the stream of destiny,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is tied to Jove's eternal seat?
Fairy Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willing or no, who will but what they must
By destiny, and can no other chuse? Milton.

Had thy great destiny but given thee skill
To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will.
Denham.

Chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be.
Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his destiny. Shakspeare.

DE'STITUTE. adj. [destitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.
To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.
Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.
He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalms.

3. In want of.
Take the destin'd way
To find the regions destitute of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, destitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from destitute.] Want; the state in which something is wanted: applied to persons.

That destitution in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care.
Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great destitution, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in destitution or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor,
the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor.

TO DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Lat. de- struire, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building to ruin.

The Lord will destroy this city. Genesis.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.
Solyman sent his army, which burnt and de- stroyed the country villages. Knolles.

3. To kill.
A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead. Deuteronomy.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.
Shakspeare.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from destruo.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors, Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods! Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives; At random wounds, nor knows the wound she gives. Pope.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Lat.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. f. [from destruibile.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRUCTION. n. f. [from destruio, Lat.]

1. The act of destroying; subversion; demolition.

2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy, Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin; murder suffered.

If that your moody discontented souls Do through the clouds behold this present hour, Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shaksp.

When that which we immortal thought We saw so near destruction brought, We felt what you did then endure, And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; a depopulator: as a consuming plague. The destruction that wasteth at noon-day. Psalms.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death. Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. Matthew.

DESTRUCTIVE. adj. [from destruivus, low Latin.]

1. That has the quality of destroying; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote, Destructive fires among whole fleets we send. Dryden.

One may think that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.

He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addison.

Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRUCTIVELY. adv. [from destruative.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but to breathe out Moses's wish? O that men were not so destructively foolish! Decay of Piety

DESTRUCTIVENESS. n. f. [from destruative.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRUCTOR. n. f. [from destruo.] Destroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDATION. n. f. [from desudatio, Lat.] A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DESUETUDE. n. f. [from desuetudo, Lat.] Cessation from being accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESULTORY. } adj. [from desultorius, Lat.]

DESULTORIOUS. } Roving from thing to thing; unsettled; immethodical; unconstant. Desultorious is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life; nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Estrange.

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Felton on the Classics.

TO DESUME. v. a. [from desumo, Lat.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Aelian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale.

TO DETACH. v. a. [from detacher, Fr.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum. Woodward.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and yet join again one cannot tell how. Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison.

DETACHMENT. n. f. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army. Tatler.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind, Did not this work require a knowing mind, Who for the task should fit detachments chuse From all the atoms? Blackmore.

TO DETAIL. v. a. [from detailler, Fr.] To relate particularly; to particularize; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them. Cheyne.

DETAIL. n. f. [from detaill, Fr.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place. Woodward.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious. Pope.

TO DETAIN. v. a. [from detineo, Lat.]

1. To keep what belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness. Taylor.

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings sting him So venomously, that burning shame detains him From his Cordelia. Shakespeare.

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country. Broomer.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid. Judges.

Had Orpheus sung it in the nether sphere, So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear, The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there. Dryden.

4. To hold in custody.

DETAINDER. n. f. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody.

DETAINER. n. f. [from detain.] He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

Judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of men's inheritances. Taylor.

TO DETECT. v. a. [from detectus, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest; else sighing every minute, and groaning every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock. Shakespeare.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou Wouldst easily detect what I conceal. Milton.

2. To discover in general.

The utmost infinite ramifications and insculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

DETECTOR. n. f. [from detect.] A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh, heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the detector. Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy has a secret hatred of its detector; that which will bring it to a test which it cannot pass. Decay of Piety.

DETECTION. n. f. [from detect.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud, or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her then from the ward of her purity. Shakespeare.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than in the vehement and wrathful passions. Spratt.

Detection of the incoherence of loose discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form. Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.

Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that concealed them. Woodward.

DETENTION. n. f. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd

With clam'rous claims of debt, of broken bonds,
And the determent of long since due debts,
Against my honour? Shakspeare.

2. Confinement; restraint.

This worketh by determent of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts. Bacon.

- To DETER. v. a. [deterreo, Lat.] To discourage by terrour; to fright from any thing.

I never yet the tragick strain assay'd,
Deter'd by thy inimitable maid. Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty; yet our case is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side. Tillotson.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them. Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method. Addison.

My own face deters me from my glais;
And Kneller only shews what Celia was. Prior.

- To DETERGE. v. a. [detergo, Lat.] To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from feculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incarn. Wiseman.

Sea salt preserves bodies, through which it passeth, from corruption; and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction. Arbuthnot.

- DETERGENT. adj. [from deterge.] That has the power of cleansing.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent.
Arbuthnot.

- DETERIORATION. n. f. [from deterior, Lat.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

- DETERMENT. n. f. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred. A good word, but not now used.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others. Brown.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you. Boyle.

- DETERMINABLE. adj. [from determine.] That may be certainly decided.

Whether all plants have seeds, were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, ferns, and some others.

About this matter, which seems so easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree. Boyle.

- To DETERMINATE. v. a. [determiner, French.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate. Not in use.

The fly-slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakspeare.

- DETERMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Lat.]

1. Settled; definite; determined.
Demonstrations in numbers, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and deter-minate in their application. Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbs, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun, and to the quantity of the solar matter. Bentley.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and without either choice or stint appointed by any determinate order. Hlooker.

3. Decisive; conclusive.

I th' progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he,
I mean the bishop, did require a respite. Shaks.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disused in a long peace, more deter-minate to do, than skilful how to do. Sidney.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy.
Shakspeare.

DETERMINATELY. adv. [from *determi-
nate*.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmene. Sidney.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Tillotson.

DETERMINATION. n. f. [from *determi-
nate*.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is to go home, and to trouble you no more. Shakspeare.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellec-
tion, deliberation, and determination or decision.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and upon very nice and dangerous precipices stand their determinations on either side. South.

Consult thy judgment, affections, and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver.

DETERMINATIVE. adj. [from *determi-
nate*.]

1. That uncontrollably directs to a certain end.

That individual action, which is justly punished as sinful in us, cannot proceed from the special influence and determinative power of a just cause. Bramhall against Hobbes.

2. That makes a limitation.

If the term added to make up the complex subject does not necessarily or constantly belong to it, then it is determinative, and limits the subject to a particular part of its extension; as, every pious man shall be happy. Watts.

DETERMINATOR. n. f. [from determinate.] One who determines.

They have recourse unto the great determina-tor of virginity, conceptions, fertility, and the infrutable infirmities of the whole body. Brown.

- To DETERMINE. v. a. [determiner, Fr.
determino, Lat.]

1. To fix; to settle.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?

—It is determin'd, not concluded yet;
But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shaks.

More particularly to determine the proper season for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rheto-rick. Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determined, on the other side. South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species.
Addison.

Destruition hangs on every word we speak,
On every thought, till the concluding stroke
Determines all, and closes our design. Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Atterbury.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is,
by the uneasiness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Samuel.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakspeare.

To DETERMINE. v. n.

1. To conclude; to form a final conclusion.

Eve! now expect great tidings, which perhaps
Of us will soon determine, or impose
New laws to be observ'd. Milton.

2. To settle opinion.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

3. To end; to come to an end.

They were apprehended, and, after conviction, the danger determined by their deaths. Hayward.

All pleasure springing from a gratified passion, as most of the pleasure of sin does, must needs
determine with that passion. South.

4. To make a decision.

She soon shall know of us
How honourably and how kindly we Determine for her. Shakspeare.

5. To end consequentially.

Revolutions of state, many times, make way for new institutions and forms; and often determine in either setting up some tyranny at home, or bringing in some conquest from abroad. Temple.

6. To resolve concerning any thing.

Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met is to determine of the coronation. Shakspeare.

I endeavoured deterfion, but the matter could not be discharged. Wifeman.

DETERFIVE. adj. [from deterge.] Having the power to cleanse.

DETERFIVE. n. f. An application that has the power of cleansing wounds.

We frequently see simple ulcers afflicted with sharp humours, which corrode them, and render them painful fordid ulcers, if not timely relieved by deterfives and lenients. Wifeman.

To DETEST. v. a. [detestor, Latin.] To hate; to abhor; to abominate.

Nigh thereto the ever-damned beast, Durst not approach; for he was deadly made, And all that life preserved did detest. F. Queen. Glory grows guilty of detested crimes, When for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part, We bend to that the working of the heart. Shaksf.

I've liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods Detest my baseness. Shakspeare.

There is that naturally in the heart of man which abhors sin as sin, and consequently would make him detest it both in himself and others too. South.

Who dares think one thing, and another tell, My heart detests him as the gates of hell. Pope.

DETESTABLE. adj. [from detest.] Hateful; abhorred; abominable; odious.

Beguill'd, divorc'd, wrong'd, spighted, slain! Most detestable death. Shakspeare.

He desired him to consider that both armies consisted of christians, to whom nothing is more detestable than effusion of human blood. Hayward.

DETESTABLY. adv. [from detestable.] Hatefully; abominably; odiously.

It stands here stigmatized by the apostle as a temper of mind rendering men so detestably bad, that the great enemy of mankind neither can nor desires to make them worse. South.

DETESTA'TION. n. f. [from detest.] 1. Hatred; abhorrence; abomination.

Then only did misfortune make her see what she had done, especially finding in us rather detestation than pity. Sidney.

2. It is sometimes used with for; but of seems more proper.

The detestation you express For vice in all its glitt'ring drefs. Swift.

Our love of God will inspire us with a detestation for sin, as what is of all things most contrary to his divine nature. Swift.

DETESTER. n. f. [from detest.] One that hates or abhors.

To DETHRONE. v. a. [detroner, French; de and thronus, Latin.] To divest of regality; to throw down from the throne; to deprive of regal dignity.

DETINUE. n. f. [detenue, French.] A writ that lies against him, who, having goods or chattels delivered him to keep, refuses to deliver them again. Corwell.

DETONA'TION. n. f. [detono, Lat.] A noise somewhat more forcible than the ordinary crackling of salts in calcination; as in the going off of the pulvis or aurum fulminans, or the like. It is also used for that noise which happens upon the mixture of fluids that ferment with violence, as oil of turpentine with oil of vitriol, resembling the explosion of gunpowder. Quincy.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation occasioned by the former be either quite or almost altogether ended; unless it chance that the puffing matter do blow the coal too soon out of the crucible. Boyle.

To DETONIZE. v. a. [from detono, Latin.] To calcine with detonation. A chymical term.

Nineteen parts in twenty of detonized nitre is destroyed in eighteen days. Arbuthnot on Air.

To DETRACT. v. a. [detrahum, Lat. detraher, French.]

1. To derogate; to take away by envy, calumny, or censure, any thing from the reputation of another: with from.

Those were assistants in private, but not trusted to manage the affairs in public; for that would detract from the honour of the principal ambassador. Bacon.

No envy can detract from this: it will shine in history, and, like swans, grow whiter the longer it endures. Dryden.

2. To take away; to withdraw.

By the largeness of the cornices they hinder both the light within, and likewise detract much from the view of the front without. Wotton.

The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it. Bayle.

DETRACTER. n. f. [from detract.] One that takes away another's reputation; one that impairs the honour of another injuriously.

I am right glad to be thus satisfied, in that I yet was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slanderous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.

Whether we are so entirely sure of their loyalty upon the present foot of government, as you may imagine, their detractors make a question. Swift.

Away the fair detractors went, And gave by turns their censures vent. Swift.

DETRACTI'ON. n. f. [detrahtio, Latin; detraction, French.]

Detraction, in the native importance of the word, signifies the withdrawing or taking off from a thing; and, as it is applied to the reputation, it denotes the impairing or lessening a man in point of fame, rendering him less valued and esteemed by others, which is the final aim of detraction. Ayliffe.

I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure The taints and blames I laid upon myself, For strangers to my nature. Shakspeare.

Fame, that her high birth to raise, Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse, We may justly now accuse

Of detraction from her praise. Milton.

If detraction could invite us, discretion surely would contain us from any derogatory intention. Brown.

To put a stop to the insults and detractions of vain men, I resolved to enter into the examination. Woodward.

To consider an author as the subject of obloquy and detraction, we may observe with what pleasure a work is received by the invidious part of mankind, in which a writer falls short of himself. Addison.

DETRACTORY. adj. [from detract.] Defamatory by denial of desert; derogatory. Sometimes with to, properly from.

This is not only derogatory unto the wisdom of God, who hath proposed the world unto our knowledge, and thereby the notion of himself; but also detractions unto the intellect and sense of man, expressly disposed for that inquisition. Brown.

In mentioning the joys of heaven, I use the expressions I find less detractions from a theme above our praises. Boyle.

The detraction lye takes from a great man the reputation that justly belongs to him. Arbuthnot.

DETRACTRESS. n. f. [from detract.] A censorious woman.

If any shall detract from a lady's character, unless she be absent, the said detractions shall be forthwith ordered to the lowest place of the room. Addison.

DETRIMENT. n. f. [detrimentum, Lat.] Loss; damage; mischief; diminution; harm.

Difficult it must be for one christian church to abolish that which all had received and held for the space of many ages, and that without any detriment unto religion. Hooker.

I can repair That detriment, if such it be, to lose Self-lost. Milton.

If your joint pow'r prevail, th' affairs of hell No detriment need fear; go, and be strong. Milton.

There often fall out so many things to be done on the sudden, that some of them must of necessity be neglected for that whole year, which is the greatest detriment to this whole mystery. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Let a family burn but a candle a night less than the usual number, and they may take in the Spectator without detriment to their private affairs. Addison.

DETRIMENTAL. adj. [from detriment.] Mischievous; harmful; causing loss.

Among all honorary rewards, which are neither dangerous nor detrimental to the donor, I remember none so remarkable as the titles which are bestowed by the emperor of China: these are never given to any subject till the subject is dead. Addison.

Obstinacy in prejudices, which are detrimental to our country, ought not to be mistaken for virtuous resolution and firmness of mind. Addison.

TO DEVIATE. v. n. [de via decedere, Latin.]

1. To wander from the right or common way.

The rest to some faint meaning make pre-tence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense. Dryden.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track. Pope.

What makes all physical and moral ill?
There nature deviates, and here wanders will. Pope.

Besides places which may deviate from the sense of the author, it would be kind to observe any deficiencies in the diction. Pope.

2. To go astray; to err; to sin; to offend.

DEVIATION. n. f. [from deviate.]

1. The act of quitting the right way; error; wandering.

These bodies constantly move round in the same tracks, without making the least deviation. Cheyne.

2. Variation from established rule.

Having once surveyed the true and proper natural alphabet, we may easily discover the deviations from it, in all the alphabets in use, either by defect of single characters, of letters, or by confusion of them. Holder.

3. Offence; obliquity of conduct.

Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground, that they may not bring error into habit. Clarissa.

DEVISE. n. f. [devise, French; devisa, Italian.]

1. A contrivance; a stratagem.

This is our devise,
That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shakespeare.

He intended it as a politick devise to lessen their interest, and keep them low in the world. Atterbury.

2. A design; a scheme formed; project; speculation.

Touching the exchange of laws in practice with laws in devise, which they say are better for the state of the church, if they might take place; the farther we examine them, the greater cause we find to conclude, although we continue the same we are, the harm is not great. Hooker.

His devise is against Babylon, to destroy it. Jeremiah.

There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord shall stand. Proverbs.

3. The emblem on a shield; the ensign armorial of a nation or family.

Then change we shields, and their devices bear;

Let fraud supply the want of force in war. Dryd.
Hibernia's harp, devise of her command,
And parent of her mirth, shall there be seen. Prior.

They intend to let the world see what party they are of, by figures and designs upon these fans; as the knights-errant used to distinguish themselves by devices on their shields. Addison.

4. Invention; genius.

He's gentle; never schooled, and yet learned; full of noble devise, of all sorts enchantingly beloved. Shakespeare.

DEVIL. n. f. [diabolus, Saxon; diabolus, Latin.] It were more properly written diavel.

1. A fallen angel; the tempter and spiritual enemy of mankind.

Are you a man?
—Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that which might appal the devil. Shakespeare.

2. A wicked man or woman.

See thyself, devil:
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. Shakespeare.

3. A ludicrous term for mischief.

A war of profit mitigates the evil;
But to be tax'd, and beaten, is the devil. Granv.

4. A kind of expletive, expressing wonder or vexation.

The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare;

But wonder how the devil they got there! Pope.

5. A kind of ludicrous negative in an adverbial sense.

The devil was well, the devil a monk was he. A Proverb.

DEVILISH. adj. [from devil.]

Gynecia mistrusted greatly Cecropia, because she had heard much of the devilish wickedness of her heart. Sidney.

For grief thereof, and devilish despight,
From his infernal furnace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light.

Enroll'd in dusky smoke and brimstone blue. Spenser.

He trains his devilish engin'ry, impal'd
On ev'ry side with shadowy squadrons deep. Milton.

2. Having communication with the devil.

The duchess, by his subornation,
Upon my life began her devilish practices. Shak.

3. An epithet of abhorrence or contempt.

A devilish knave! besides, the knave is handsome, young, and blyth: all those requisites are in him that delight. Shakespeare.

4. Excessive: in a ludicrous sense.

Thy hair and beard are of a different dye,
Short of a foot, distorted of an eye;
With all these tokens of a knave complete,
If thou art honest, thou'rt a devilish cheat. Addis.

DEVILISHLY. adv. [from devilish.] In a manner suiting the devil; diabolically.

Those trumpeters threatened them with continual alarms of damnation, if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which wickedly and devilishly those impostors called the cause of God. South.

DEVILKIN. n. f. [from devil.] A little devil. Clarissa.

DEVIOUS. adj. [devius, Latin.]

1. To contrive; to form by art; to invent; to excogitate; to strike out by thought.

Whether they, at their first coming into the land, or afterwards, by trading with other nations which had letters, learned them of them, or devised them among themselves, is very doubtful. Spenser's State of Ireland.

He could by his skill draw after him the weight of five thousand bushels of grain, and devise those rare engines which shot small stones at hand, but great ones afar off. Peacham.

Ye sons of art, one curious piece devise,
From whose construction motion shall arise. Blackmore.

2. To plan; to scheme.

Behold I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Jerem.

TO DEVISE. v. n. To consider; to contrive; to lay plans; to form schemes: anciently with of.

Her merry fit the freshly 'gan to rear,
And did of joy and jollity devise,
Herself to cherish and her guest to cheer.

Fairy Queen.

But fith now safe ye seized have the shore,
And well arrived are, high God be blest,
Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest.

Fairy Queen.

Since we are so far entered, let us, I pray you, a little devise of those evils by which that country is held in this wretched case, that it cannot, as you say, be recured. Spenser's Ireland.

Devise but how you'll use him when he comes, and let us two devise to bring him thither. Shakespeare.

DEVISE. n. f. [devise, a will, old Fr.]

1. The act of giving or bequeathing by will.

This word is properly attributed, in our common law, to him that bequeaths his goods by his last will or testament in writing; and the reason is, because those that now appertain only to the devifour, by this act are distributed into many parts. Cowell.

The alienation is made by devise in a last will only, and the third part of these profits is there demandable. Locke.

2. Contrivance. See DEVICE.

God hath omitted nothing needful to his purpose, nor left his intention to be accomplished by our devises. Hooker.

To DEVISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To grant by will. A law term.

DEVISEE'. n. f. He to whom something is bequeathed by will.

DEVI'SER. n. f. [from devise.] A contriver; an inventor.

Being divided from truth in themselves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for true it is, if I say they are daily mocked into error by devifers. Brown.

The authors of useful inventions, the devifers of wholesome laws, as were the philosophers of ancient times, were honoured as the fathers and prophets of their country. Grew.

DEVI'SOUR. n. f. He that gives by will.
See DEVISE.

DE'VITABLE. adj. [devitabilis, Latin.]

And nought but pressed grafs where she had lyen,

I forrow'd all so much as earst I joy'd. Fairy Q.

2. Without any thing, whether good or evil; free from; in want of.

He flung it from him, and devoid of dread
Upon him lightly leaped without heed. Fairy Q.
That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with proper locality, is generally opinioned. Glanville.

The motion of this chariot will still be easier as it ascends higher, till at length it shall become utterly devoid of gravity, when the least strength will be able to bestow upon it a swift motion.
Wilkins' Mathematical Magick.

His warlike mind, his soul devoid of fear,
His high designing thoughts were figur'd there,
As when, by magick, ghosts are made appear. Dryden.

We Tyrians are not so devoid of sense,
Nor so remote from Phœbus' influence. Dryden.

DEVO'IR. n. f. [devoir, French.]

such a multitude of statesmen, they devolved their whole authority into the hands of the council of sixty. Addison.

The whole power, at home and abroad, was devolved upon that family. Swift.

The matter which devolves from the hills down upon the lower grounds, does not confiderably raise and augment them. Woodward.

To DEVO'LTE. v. n.

1. To roll down.

2. To fall in succession into new hands.

Supposing people, by wanting spiritual blessings, did lose all their right to temporal, yet that forfeiture must devolve only to the supreme Lord. Decay of Piety.

DEVOLU'TION. n. f. [devolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling down.

The raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills and high grounds, will fall under our consideration. Woodward.

2. Removal successive from hand to hand.

The jurisdiction exercised in those courts is derived from the crown of England, and the last devolution is to the king by way of appeal. Hale.

DEVORA'TION. n. f. [from devoro, Lat.]

The act of devouring. Diſ.

To DEVO'TE. v. a. [devotico, devotus,
Latin.]

1. To dedicate; to consecrate; to appropriate by vow.

No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possessions, shall be sold or redeemed. Lev.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shaksp.

They, impious, dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

2. To addict; as to a sect, or study.

While we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let 's be no stocks, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd. Shaksp.

If persons of this make should ever devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and strong constitution of body. Watts.

3. To condemn; to resign to ill.

Aliens were devoted to their rapine and de-spight. Decay of Piety.

Ah why, Penelope, this causeless fear,
To render sleep's soft blessings insincere?
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme
The day reflection and the midnight dream. Pope.

4. To addict; to give up to ill.

The Romans having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of other nations, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness. Grew.

5. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.

I fly
Those wicked tents devoted; lest the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flame, Distinguish not. Milton.

To destruction sacred and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die. Milton.

Goddeſs of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, hisſing through the ſkies, the feather'd
deaths were dealt. Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when ſuch a wretch was born;
Like me to deſerts and to darkneſs run. Roscoe.

DEVO'TE. adj. For devoted.

How on a sudden loſt, Defac'd, deſlower'd, and now to death devote!
Milton.

DEVO'TEDNESS. n. f. [from devote.]

The ſtate of being devoted or dedicated; conſecration; addictedneſs.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her diſadvantage, relates to her but as ſhe was, or may again be, an obſtacle to your devotedneſs to ſera-phick love. Boyle.

The owning of our obligation unto virtue, may be ſtyled natural religion; that is to ſay, a devotedneſs unto God, ſo as to act according to his will. Grew.

DEVOTEE'. n. f. [devot, French.] One erroneouſly or ſuperſtitiouſly religious;

His waving ſtreamers to the winds diſplays,
And vows for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden.

3. An act of external worſhip.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hooker.

For as I paſſed by and beheld your devotion,
I found an altar with this inſcription, To the unknown God. Acts.

In vain doth man the name of juſt expect,
If his devotions he to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expreſſion of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night ſaid his devotion,
No other worldly buſineſs did apply. Fairy Q.
Your devotion has its opportunity: we muſt pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Spratt.

5. The ſtate of the mind under a ſtrong ſenſe of dependance upon God; devoutneſs; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good Deſcends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes

Directed in devotion, to adore
And worſhip God ſupreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir when loud hoſannas riſe,
And ſwell the pomp of dreadful ſacrifice;
Amid that ſcene, if ſome relenting eye
Glance on the ſtone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's ſelf ſhall ſteal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear ſhall drop, and be forgiv'n. Pope.

Devotion may be conſidered either as an ex-erciſe of publick or private prayers at ſet times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a ſtate and diſpoſition of the heart, which is rightly affected with ſuch exerciſes. Law.

6. An act of reverence, reſpect, or ceremony.

Whither away ſo faſt?
—Upon the like devotion as yourſelves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakſpeare.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; ſuch as makes the lover the ſole property of the perſon loved.

Be oppoſite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter.
Shakspeare.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education. Clarendon.

8. Earnestness; ardour; eagerness.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite.
Shakspeare.

9. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.

Arundel castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion. Clarendon.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.] Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me. King Charles.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces. South.

DEVOTIONALIST. n. f. [from devotion.] A man zealous without knowledge, or superstitiously devout.

To DEVOUR. v. a. [devoro, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will say some evil beast hath devoured him.
Genesis.

We've willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd. Shakspeare.

So looks the pent up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws. Shaks.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth. Joel.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war. Dryden.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection. Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He seem'd in swiftness to devour the way.
Shakspeare.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devoured. South.

Death stalks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour.
Dryden.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.
Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.] A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers;
Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished! Shaks.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence. Decay of Piety.

Carp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn. Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour. Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

For this, with soul devout, he thank'd the god;
And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.
Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Anon dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient fire descends with all his train;
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n. Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Pi- ously; with ardent devotion; reli- giously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakspeare.

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face.
Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-
day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray.
Donne.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,

How, with affrighted eyes,

Thou saw'st the wide extended deep

In all its horrors rise! Addison.

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first. Atterbury.

DEUSE. n. f. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dufius, the name of a cer- tain species of evil ipirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it.
Congreve.

DEUTERO'GAMY. n. f. [δευτερος and γάμος.] A second marriage. DiG.

DEUTERO'NOMY. n. f. [δευτερος and νόμος.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

DEUTERO'SCOPY. n. f. [δευτερος and σκοπέω.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense. Not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [deap, Saxon; daaw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water; which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes. Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tim'rous dreams was still awak'd.
Shakspeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where. Shakspeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakspeare.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed. Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to be- dew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dear, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dewed been with timely rain. Fairy Q.

With him pour we in our country's purge
Each drop of us.

—Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Shakspeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tears.
Shakspeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,

Without the vent of words which these he breath'd. Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears
In sable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.
Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and strows the ground

With headless ranks. Philips.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean rasberries, which are also of the bramble kind.
Hanmer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakspeare.

DEWBESP'ENT. part. [dew and besp'ent.] Sprinkled with dew.

This evening late, by them the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbesp'ent, and were in fold,
I fat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this com- pound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He now, to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so fore did smite,
That to the skull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sunrise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear. Shaks.

An host
Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower. Milton.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!
Tickel.

DEWLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rowles of fat about his shoulders slung,
And from his neck the double dewlap hung.
Addison.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
Shakspeare.

DEWLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Fur- nished with dewlaps.

Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dewlapt like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? Shakspeare.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.

DE'W-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.] A worm found in dew.

For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]

1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.

From the earth a dewy mist
Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.

Where two adverse winds,
Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine Roars stormy. Philips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.

The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red
Spenser.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep,
Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.
His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.

Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
The rocks of Herculius and dewy fields. Dryden.

My mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my fire's. Shakspeare.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]

1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readiness to attain skill; skill; expertness.

2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.

His wisdom, by often evading from peril, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.

They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.

The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors. Swift.

DEXTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]

1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready: as, a dexterous workman.

For both their dext'rous hands the lance could wield. Pope.

2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.

They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves. Locke.

DEXTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.] Expertly; skilfully; artfully.

The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister. South.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky dice. Dryden.

As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dextrality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES. n. f. [diabētēs.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliquation by the urinary passages.

An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consumptions. Derham's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL. } adj. [from diabolus,
DIABO'LICK. } Latin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.

This, in other beasts observ'd,
Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milt.

Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature. L'Estrange.

The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise, and they that use it are the devil's children. Ray.

Damned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage; and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to wish all men to share their misery. Atterbury.

DIACO'DIUM. n. f. [diakōdion.] The syrup of poppies.

DIACO'USTICS. n. f. [diakoustikā.] The doctrine of sounds.

DIADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]

1. A tiara; an ensign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.

The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
And purple robe gored with many a wound. Spenser.

A list the coblers' temples ties,
To keep the hair out of their eyes;
From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.

A crown,
Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,

To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.

Why should he ravish then that diadem
From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his? Denham.

Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,
Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Roscom.

DI'ADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.

Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,

Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. f. [diadromē.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DIE'RESIS. n. f. [diēresis.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as acr.

DIAGNO'STICK. n. f. [diagnōstikā.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.

I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house:—let us hear your diagnosticks. Collier on Pride.

One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks. Harvey.

DIA'GONAL. adj. [diagonalis.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.

The monstrosity of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the legs of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal movers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DIA'GONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.

When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DIA'GONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.

The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in one, which, upon confront or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other; but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIAGRAM. n. f. [diagramma.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.

Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRY'DIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.

All cholerick humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhubarb powder. Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shows the hour.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakspeare.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.

Strada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison's Spectator.

DIALECT. n. f. [diálektoς.]

1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.

2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do practise that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they shun, as if there were in them some secret sting. Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakspeare.

If the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL. adj. [from dialectick.]

Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logic; the art of reasoning.

DI'ALLING. n. f. [from dial.] The sciaterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may show the hour.

DI'ALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Moxon.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.DIALOGUE. n. f. [διάλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakspeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked sex! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden.
In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise:
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise.

Dryden.

To DI'ALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To discourse with another; to confer.

Dost dialogue with thy shadow? Shakspeare.

DIALYSIS. n. f. [διάλυσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.DIAMETER. n. f. [διά and μέτρον.] The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addison.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to prophaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

VOL. I.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all the gems, is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely fiercest of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hill on Fossils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promis'd.

Shakspeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond:
thou hast the right arched bent of the brow.

Shakspeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty: as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that ushers in the morn. Blackmore.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DIAPASE. n. f. [διά πασών.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase. Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPASON. n. f. [διά πασών.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Bacon.

Harsh din

Broke the fair musick that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Cresshaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;

From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine;
Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in lyne,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shak.

To DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discolour'd mead. Spenser.

Flora used to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howel.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peachment on Drawing.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from διαφανεία.] Transparency; pellucidity; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eye-lids so contrived as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ray.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [διά and φάνος.] Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διά and φάνω.] Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphanous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphanous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [διαφορητικός.] Sudorific; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorific, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perspirable. Arbuth.

DIAPHRAGM. n. f. [διάφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of bodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward.

DIARRHOEA. n. f. [διαρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Quincy.

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanelis. Wifeman.

DIARRHOETICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Millet is diarrhoeic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbutnot.

DIARY. n. f. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but, in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tutler.

DIASTOLE. n. f. [διαστολη.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, by which a short syllable is made long.
2. The dilatation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray.

DIASTYLE. [δια, and στυλος, a pillar.] A sort of edifice, where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATESSERON. n. f. [of δια, and τεσσαρα, four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semitone: its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATONICK. [of διατονος.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semitone. Harris.

DIATHEUTICK Tone. [of δια and θευω.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two-fourths, one on each side of it; and which, being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diatheutick tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIBBLE. n. f. [from dipfel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Junius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and spade,

By line and by level trim garden is made. Tuffer's Husbandry.

DIBSTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains, to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICA'CITY. n. f. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertinels; faucinals. Di.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley.

To DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week. Shakspeare.

DICE-BOX. n. f. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Addison.

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows As false as dicers' oaths. Shakspeare.

DICH. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root: Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus. Shakspeare's Timon.

DICHO'TOMY. n. f. [διχοτομία.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock?—

—I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Shakspeare.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial fum?

—But ha'n't you found it, sir? Congreve.

DICKER of Leather. n. f. [dicra, low Lat.] Ten hides. Di.

To DICTATE. v. a. [dicto, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay, And studded amber darts a golden ray; Such, and not nobler, in the realms above, My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope.

Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Those right helps of art, which will scarce be found by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say, And Samian sounds o'er Scots's hills convey. Prior.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail. Pope.

DICTATION. n. f. [from dictate.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. Di.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A magistrate of Rome, made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictators made, when they came home, Their vanquish'd foes free citizens of Rome. Waller.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes;

But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose. Prior.

2. One invested with absolute authority.

Unanimous they all commit the care And management of this main enterprize To him, their great dictator. Milton.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths. Locke.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding. Watts.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observator that treats of trade and politicks in a dictatorial stile, and is lavish in the praise of the author. Watts.

DICTATORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator.

This is the solemnest title they can confer under the principedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship. Watts.

2. Authority; insolent confidence.

This is that perpetual dictatorship which is exercised by Lucretius, though often in the wrong. Dryden.

DICTATURE. n. f. [dictatura, Latin.] The office of a dictator; dictatorship. Di.

DICTION. n. f. [dictio, French; dictio, Lat.] Style; language; expression.

There appears in every part of his dictio, or expression, a kind of noble and bold purity. Dryden.

DICTIONARY. n. f. [ditionarium, Lat.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Is it such a fault to translate simulara images? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholic dictionary. Stillingfleet.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words. Watts.

DID. of do. [did, Saxon.]

1. The preterit of do.

Thou canst not say I did it. Shakspeare.

What did that greatness in a woman's mind?

Ill lodg'd, and weak to act what it design'd. Dryden.

2. The sign of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand, Or rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically: as I did really love him.

DIDA'CTICAL. } adj. [διδασκαλικος.] Pre-DIDA'CTICK. } ceptive; giving precepts: as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

DIE

The means used to this purpose are partly didactic, and partly protreptical; demonstrating the truth of the gospel, and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity. Ward on Infid.

DI'DAPPER. n. f. [from dip.] A bird that dives into the water.

DIDASCA'LICK. adj. [διδασκαλικός] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didactic or heroic, I leave to the judgment of the critics.

DI'DDER. v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. Skinner.

DIPST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain

Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign. Dryden.

DIDU'CTION. n. f. [diductio, Latin.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to shew what kind of strings they are, which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw as forcibly one as another, in comparison of those that within the bladder draw so as to hinder the diduction of its sides. Boyle.

TO DIE. v. a. [beag, Saxon, a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts Had entertain'd, as died her cheeks with pale. Milton.

All white, a virgin faint she fought the skies; For marriage, though it sullies not, it dies. Dryden.

DIE. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me, Which makes my whit'st part black. Shaksp.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many. Bacon.

Darkness we see emerges into light, And shining suns descend to fable night; Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die, When wearied animals in slumbers lie Of midnight ease; another, when the grey Of morn precludes the splendor of the day. Dryden.

It is surprising to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours of thought. Collier of the Aspect.

TO DIE. v. n. [beadian, Sax.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer. Sidney.

Nor did the third his conquests long survive, Dying ere scarce he had begun to live. Addison.

Oh let me live my own, and die so too! To live and die is all I have to do. Denham.

2. To perish by violence or disease. The dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat. Dryden.

Talk not of life or ransom, he replies; Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies: In vain a single Trojan sues for grace; But least the sons of Priam's hateful race: Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore? The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

DIE

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die; And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality? Pope.

3. It has by before an instrument of death. Their young men shall die by the sword; their sons and daughters shall die by famine. Jerem.

4. Of before a disease. They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm. Wifeman.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause: these prepositions are not always truly distinguished. At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd; At last with terror she from thence doth fly, And loaths the war'ry glass wherein she gaz'd, And thuns it still, altho' for thirst she die. Davies.

He in the loaden vineyard dies for thirst. Addison.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall. Addison.

6. To be punished with death. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. Shaksp. What is the love of our neighbour?—The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ died. Hammond.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing. How now, my lord, why do you keep alone? Of forriest fancies your companion making, Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shakspere's Macbeth. If any sovereignty, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him. Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast. Spectator.

8. To sink; to faint. His heart died within him, and he became as a stone. Samuel.

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly. So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die. Hakewill on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure or tenderness. To sounds of heav'nly harps she dies away, And melts in visions of eternal day. Pope.

11. To vanish. This battle fares like to the morning's war, When dying clouds contend with growing light. Shakspere.

The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that surrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties; and darkens the whole character. Addison's Spectator.

12. [In the style of lovers.] To languish with affection. The young men acknowledged, in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca. Tatler.

13. To wither, as a vegetable. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. John.

14. To grow vapid, as liquor.

DIE. n. f. pl. dice. [dé, Fr. dis, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamblers throw in play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakspere.

DIE

I have set my life upon a cast, And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shaksp. He knows which way the lot and the die shall fall, as perfectly as if they were already cast. South.

2. Hazard; chance. Eftsoons his cruel hand fir Guyon staid, Temp'ring the passion with advisement flow, And must'ring might on enemy dismay'd; For th' equal die of war he well did know. Fairy Queen.

So both to battle fierce arranged are; In which his harder fortune was to fall Under my spear: such is the die of war. Fairy Queen.

Thine is th' adventure, thine the victory: Well has thy fortune turn'd the die for thee. Dryden.

3. Any cubick body. Young creatures have learned spelling of words by having them pasted upon little flat tablets or dies. Watts.

DIE. n. f. plur. dies. The stamp used in coinage.

Such variety of dies made use of by Wood in stamping his money, makes the discovery of counterfeits more difficult. Swift.

DI'ER. n. f. [from die.] One who follows the trade of dying; one who dies clothes.

The fleece, that has been by the dier stain'd, Never again its native whiteness gain'd. Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions who acquired great estates: cobblers, diers, and shoemakers gave public shows to the people. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DI'ET. n. f. [dieta, low Latin; διαίτα.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

They cared for no other delicacy of fare, or curiosity of diet, than to maintain life. Raleigh.

Time may come, when men With angels may participate; and find No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare. Milton.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits. Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality. Arbuthnot.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those *diet*s alter the body more, and trouble it less. Bacon.

I restrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a-day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar. Temple.

3. Allowance of provision. For his diet, there was a continual diet given him by the king. Jeremiah.

TO DI'ET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.

She *diet*s him with fasting every day, The swelling of his wounds to mitigate, And made him pray both early and eke late. Fairy Queen.

Shew a while like fearful war, To diet rank minds sick of happiness, And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop Our very veins of life. Shakspere's Henry IV.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd; The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then We powt upon the morning, are unapt To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd These pipes, and these conveyances of blood, With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request. Shakspere.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shaksp.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Swift.

2. To give food to.

I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.

To DIET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.

I join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton.

DIET-DRINK. n. f. [diet and drink.]

Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DIET. n. f. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude,
Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.

An emperor in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal. Raleigh.

DIETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. Di.

DIETER. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He sauc'd our broth as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

DIETETICAL. } adj. [διαίτητικόν.] Re-DIETETICK. } lating to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This book of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetick philosophy. Arbuth. on Alim.

To DIFFER. v. n. [differo, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have prop- erties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison's Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Bacon.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowded pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.

In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments.
Burnet's Theory.

There are certain measures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

DIFFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a difference between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or difference from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue first began
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every difference that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such difference. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Oh the strange difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my body. Shaksp. King Lear.

Here might be seen a great difference between men practised to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the difference?—It was a contention in publick. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life, that hath a difference with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Sandys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending differences. Tillotson.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a difference between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Point in question; ground of contro- versy.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakespeare.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a difference; and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch
the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and differences of sovereignty. Davies.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some differences of break or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIFFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cause a difference; to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the differences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas several combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are differenced by other concurrent causes. Holder.

Grass differenceth a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness.
Ray.

We see nothing that differences the courage of Mnestheus from that of Sergesthus. Pope.

DIFFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where different food and foil Portend distempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as different from each other, as the regions in which they are born are different. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to different men, are very different things. Locke.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DIFFERENTLY. adv. [from different.] In a different manner.

He may consider how differently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addison.

DIFFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.]
In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light so differing, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvi- ous. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unweildy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glanville's Scepis.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touched none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICILNESS. n. f. [from difficil.] Dif-culty to be persuaded; incomppliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficilness, or the like;
but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief.
Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facil.

It is difficult in the eyes of this people. Zachar.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DIFFICULTY. adv. [from difficult.]

Hardly; with difficulty; not easily.

A man, who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficultly be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Rogers's Sermons.

D I F

D I F F I C U L T Y. n. f. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a pernicious mistake certainly; and the more pernicious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat: Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Addison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To D I F F I D E. v. n. [diffido, Latin.]

To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods. Dryden.

D I F F I D E N C E. n. f. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal

To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt

In feeble hearts, propense enough before

To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense; And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence; lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

D I F F I D E N T. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou

Dismiss not her, when most thou need'st her nigh. Milton.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Arbutnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brautishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident. Clarissa.

To D I F F I N D. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.]

To cleave in two; to split. Diä.

D I F

D I F F I S S I O N. n. f. [diffissio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Diä.

D I F F L A ' T I O N. n. f. [difflare, Lat.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Diä.

D I F F L U E N C E. } n. f. [from diffluo, Lat.]
D I F F L U E N C Y. } The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to consistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquirith no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffuency; and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

D I F F L U E N T. adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

D I F F O R M. adj. [from forma, Latin.]

Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a difform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of difform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

D I F F O R M I T Y. n. f. [from difform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposition of things, they desire in them a difformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown.

D I F F R A ' N C H I S E M E N T. n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To D I F F U ' S E. v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd

Good out of evil to create; instead

Of spirits malign, a better race to bring

Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse

His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,

Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,

And through the conquer'd world diffuse our fame. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,

And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

D I F F U ' S E. adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

D I F F U ' S E D. participial adj. [from diffuse.]

This word seems to have signified, in Shakspeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once, With some diffused song. Shakspeare.

He grows like savages,

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakspeare.

D I F F U ' S E D L Y. adv. [from diffused.]

Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

D I F F U ' S E D N E S S. n. f. [from diffused.]

The state of being diffused; dispersion.

D I F F U ' S E L Y. adv. [from diffuse.]

D I G

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

D I F F U ' S I O N. n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

D I F F U ' S I V E. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass

They make that warmth in others they expect:

Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering diffusion.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,

Exert their heads from underneath the mists,

And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,

And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;

Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,

And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of christians. Tillotson.

D I F F U ' S I V E L Y. adv. [from diffusive.]

Widely; extensively; every way.

D I F F U ' S I V E N E S S. n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend, is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal over-run with it. Addison Med.

To D I G. v. a. pret. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [dic, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spade.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall, I beheld a door. Ezekiel.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and subtlety, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chronicles.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn The branches lopt. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A ravenous vulture in his open'd side Her crooked beak and cruel talons tried;

Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast,
The growing liver still supplied the feast. Dryd.

5. To gain by digging.

It is digged out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore.

Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Job.

The Italians have often dug into lands, described in old authors as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success.

Addison's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not shake mine ire. Shakspeare.

DIGAMY. n. f. [διγάμια.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining.

Bishop Ferne.

DIGERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. DiA.

DIGEST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation.

Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

To DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum,
Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,

When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear? Shakspeare's Henry v.

Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghil: a chymical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well. Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play

Leaps o'er the vaunt and firrings of those broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play. Shakspeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.

—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then, howsoever thou speak'st, 'mongst other things

I shall digest it. Shakspeare's Mer. of Ven.

The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peacham.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwall and Albany,

With my two daughters dowers, digest the third. Shakspeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter,
as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.

People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters. Arbut.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state. Quincy.

4. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digestor. Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] Capable of being digested or concocted.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.

Bacon's Natural History.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation;
heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Temple.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymi-cal heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there?

Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of me-thodizing; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men. Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chylifactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive, by its heat;
the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production. Hale.

3. Methodizing; adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryd.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives. Wifeman.

DIGESTURE. n. f. Concoction. Not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy digesture; such as veal, sweetbreads. Harvey.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DIGHT. v. a. [dihtan, to prepare,
to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past: the particle passive is dight, as dighted in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail

To walk the studious cloisters pale;

And love the high embowed roof,

With antick pillar, massy proof;

And storied windows richly dight,

Casting a dim religious light.

Just so the proud insulting last

Array'd and dighted Hudibras.

Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to fight. Hubb. Tale.

DIGIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quick-silver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by most, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

DIGITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.]
Branched out into divisions like fingers:

as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multifidous, or such as are dig-tated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Lat.]

A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanville.

DIGNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

TO DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.
2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæsar's fortunes! Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast.
Ben Jonson.

No turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit.
Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.
Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him.
Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.
Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands.
Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.
Faster than spring-time show'rs comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakspeare.
For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them. Shakspeare.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: νομοι δογμα.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare asseverations.
Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNOTION. n. f. [from dignosco, Latin.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averse to concede.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIGRESS. v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.
2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.

In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term.
Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.

It seemeth (to digress no farther) that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites.
Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate. Not in use.

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will so excuse
As you shall well be satisfied. Shakspeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man. Shakspeare.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.

The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him.
Sidney.

He, she knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton.

Here some digression I must make, t' accuse Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful muse.
Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers.
Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial interfections, it is right and greater; near the solstices more oblique and lesser.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Latin.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.
The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryden.
The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper fable blots the silver flood. Pope.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.

God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it.
Conway.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [dilacero, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before.
Brown.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres.
Arbuthnot.

TO DILANIATE. v. a. [dilanio, Latin.]

To tear; to rend in pieces.
Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind.
Howell's England's Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [dilapidatio, Latin.] The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any wilful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatable.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger.

Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion.
Arbuthnot.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.
Arbuthnot.

DILATATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright.
Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts.
Bacon's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions.
Newton.

TO DILATE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye sort'd with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear.
Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated flood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.
Opener of mine eyes,
Dim'rst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I sought; without thee can despise.
Milton.

Through all the air his sounding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late.
Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.
I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds:
They now dilate and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course.
Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and so dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length.
Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theme
For to dilate at large; but urg'd sore,
With piercing words, and pitiful implore,
Him-hasty to arise. Fairy Queen.

I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctively. Shakspeare's Othello.

TO DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.
His heart dilates and glories in his strength.
Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.

It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech.
Clarendon.

DILA'TOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in choleric people. Arbuthnot.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [dilatoire, Fr. dilatatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose. Hayward.

What wound did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakspeare.

These cardinals trifle with me; I abhor

This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shakspeare.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt

With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,

To throw herself away on fools and knaves.

Otway.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design. Addison's Spectator.

DILECTION. n. f. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief. Boyle.

DILEMMA. n. f. [dilemma, Latin.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon's Henry VII.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss; Whom good or ill does equally confound, And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.

Corley.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desp'rate case!

To act with infamy, or quit the place. Swift.

A dire dilemma, either way I'm sped;

If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead.

Pope.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.]

Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; uninterrupted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

2 Timothy.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure.

2 Peter.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings. Proverbs.

2. Constantly applied; prosecuted with activity and perseverance; assiduous.

And the judges shall make diligent inquiry. Deuteronomy.

DILIGENTLY. adv. [from diligent.]

With assiduity; with heed and perseverance; not carelessly; not idly; not negligently.

If you inquire not attentively and diligently, you shall never be able to discern a number of mechanical motions. Bacon.

The ancients have diligently examined in what consists the beauty of good postures. Dryden.

DILL. n. f. [dile, Saxon.] An herb, which hath a slender, fibrous, annual root; the leaves are like those of fennel; the seeds are oval, plain, streaked, and bordered.

Dill is raised of seed, which is ripe in August.

Mortimer.

DILUCID. adj. [dilucidus, Latin.]

1. Clear; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it. Arbuthnot.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed.

Locke.

The aliment ought to be thin to dilute, demulcent to temper, or acid to subdue. Arbuth.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventitious light. Newton.

DILUTE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

Newton.

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.]

Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about. Burnet.

DIM. adj. [dimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; dow, Erse.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form how can my spark discern, Which, dim by nature, art did never clear?

Davies.

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths. Rogers.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being.

Locke.

Something, as dim to our internal view, Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do. Pope.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face right wondrous fair did seem to be, That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw

Through the dim shade, that all men might it see.

Spenser.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,

It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dim sighted.

Bacon.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight?

Locke.

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head, With all such reading as was never read. Pope.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide, By conduct of some star, doth make her way,

When as a storm hath dim'd her trusty guide, Out of her course doth wander far astray. Spenser.

All of us have cause

To wail the dimming of our shining star. Shakspeare.

Thus while he spake, each passion dim'd his face,

Thrice chang'd. Milton.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants.

Dryden.

DIMENSION. n. f. [dimensio, Latin.]

Space contained in any thing; bulk; extent; capacity. It is seldom used but in the plural. The three dimensions are length, breadth, and depth.

He tried

The tomb, and found the straight dimensions wide. Dryden.

My gentleman was measuring my walls, and taking the dimensions of the room. Swift.

DIMENSIONLESS. adj. [from dimension.]

Without any definite bulk.

In they pass'd

Dimensionless through heav'nly doors. Milton.

DIMENSIVE. adj. [dimensus, Lat.] That marks the boundaries or outlines.

All bodies have their measure, and their space; But who can draw the soul's dimensive lines?

Davies.

DIMICATION. n. f. [dimicatio, Lat.] A battle; the act of fighting; contest.

Di.

DIMIDIA'TION. n. f. [dimidiatio, Latin.]

The act of halving; division into two equal parts.

Di.

To DIMINISH. v. a. [diminuo, Latin.]

1. To make less by abscission or destruction of any part: the opposite to increase.

That we call good which is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us. Locke.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw

The number of thy worshippers. Milton.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs: the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke. Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it.

Deuteronomy.

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had, increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;

Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope.

DIMINISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.]

In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent.

Locke.

DIMINUTION. n. f. [diminutio, Latin.]

1. The act of making less: opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less: opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force; and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee

Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd

In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wise by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addison.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

DIMINUTIVE. adj. [diminutivus, Latin.]

Small; little; narrow; contracted.

The poor wren,

The most diminutive of birds, will fight,

Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

It is the interest of mankind, in order to the advance of knowledge, to be sensible they have yet attained it but in poor and diminutive measure.

Glanville's Sceptis.

The light of man's understanding is but a short, diminutive, contracted light, and looks not beyond the present. South.

If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race of lovers, we should, in a little time, see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

They know how weak and awkward many of those little diminutive discourses are. Watts.

DIMINUTIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A word formed to express littleness: as lapillus, in Latin, a little stone; maisonette, in French, a little house; maniken, in English, a little man.

He afterwards proving a dainty and effeminate youth, was commonly called, by the diminutive of his name, Peterkin or Perkin. Bacon.

Sim, while but Sim, in good repute did live;

Was then a knave, but in diminutive. Cotton.

2. A small thing. Not in use.

Follow his chariot; monster-like, be shewn

For poor't diminutives, for doits! Shakspeare.

DIMINUTIVELY. adv. [from diminutive.]

In a diminutive manner.

DIMINUTIVENESS. n. f. [from diminutive.]

Smallness; littleness; pettyness; want of bulk; want of dignity.

DI'MISH. adj. [from dim.] Somewhat dim; somewhat obscure.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,

My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;

For nature, always in the right,

To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

DI'MISSORY. adj. [dimissorius, Latin.]

That by which a man is dismissed to another jurisdiction.

A bishop of another diocese ought neither to ordain or admit a clerk, without the consent of his own proper bishop, and without the letters dimissory. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DI'MITTY. n. f. A fine kind of fustian, or cloth of cotton.

I directed a trowze of fine dimitty. Wise man.

DI'MLY. adv. [from dim.]

1. Not with a quick sight; not with a clear perception.

Unspeakable! who sitt' above these heav'ns,

To us invisible, or dimly seen

In these thy lowest works. Milton.

2. Not brightly; not luminously.

In the beginning of our pumping the air, the match appeared well lighted, though it had almost filled the receiver with fumes; but by degrees it burnt more and more dimly. Boyle.

I saw th' angelick guards from earth ascend,

Griev'd they must now no longer man attend;

The beams about their temples dimly shone;

One would have thought the crime had been their own. Dryden.

DI'MNESS. n. f. [from dim.]

1. Dulness of sight.

2. Want of apprehension; stupidity.

Answerable to this dimness of their perception, was the whole system and body of their religion. Decay of Piety.

3. Obscurity; not brightness.

DIMPLE. n. f. [dint, a hole; dintle, a little hole; by a careless pronunciation dimple. Skinner.] A small cavity or depression in the cheek, chin, or other part.

The dimple of the upper lip is the common measure of them all. Grew.

In her forehead's fair half-round,

Love sits in open triumph crown'd;

He in the dimple of her chin,

In private state, by friends is seen. Prior.

To DIMPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sink in small cavities, or little inequalities.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,

And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,

As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

DI'MPLED. adj. [from dimple.] Set with dimples.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys like smiling Cupids

Shakspeare.

DI'MPLY. adj. [from dimple.] Full of dimples; sinking in little inequalities.

As the smooth surface of the dimplly flood

The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod. Warton.

DIN. n. f. [dȳn, a noise; dȳnan, to make a noise, Saxon; dyna, to thunder, Islandick.] A loud noise; a violent and continued sound.

And all the way he roared as he went,

That all the forest with astonishment

Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein

Fled fast away from that so dreadful din.

Hubberd's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;

To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar

Of a whole herd of lions. Shakspeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din

Scatters the rear of darkness thin;

And to the stack, or the barn door,

Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n

Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,

And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,

Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,

Thro' streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,

While every shot is levell'd at his sides. Smith.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stun with noise; to harass with clamour.

Rather live

To bait thee for his bread, and din your ears

With hungry cries. Orsaway's Venice Preserved.

2. To impress with violent and continued noise.

What shall we do, if his majesty puts out a proclamation commanding us to take Wood's halfpence? This hath been often dinned in my ears. Swift.

To DINE. v. n. [diner, Fr.] To eat the chief meal about the middle of the day.

Perhaps some merchant hath invited him,

And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner:

Good sister, let us dine, and never fret. Shaks.

Myself, he, and my sister,

To-day did dine together. Shakspeare.

He would dine with him the next day. Claren.

Thus, of your heroes and brave boys,

With whom old Homer makes such noise,

The greatest actions I can find,

Are, that they did their work, and din'd. Prior.

To DINE. v. a. To give a dinner to; to feed.

Boil this restoring root in gen'rous wine,

And set beside the door the fickle stock to dine.

Dryden's Virgil.

DINETICAL. adj. [dineticus.] Whirling round; vertiginous.

Some of late have concluded, from spots in the sun, which appear and disappear again, that, besides the revolution it maketh with its axis, it hath also a dinetic motion, and rolls upon its own poles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A spherical figure is most commodious for dinetic motion, or revolution upon its own axis. Ray.

To DING. v. a. pret. dung. [dringen, Dutch.]

1. To dash with violence.

2. To impress with force.

To DING. v. n. To bluster; to bounce; to huff. A low word.

He huffs and dings, because we will not spend the little we have left, to get him the title of lord Strut. Arbutnot.

DING-DONG. n. f. A word by which the sound of bells is imitated.

Let us all ring fancy's knell;
Ding, dong, bell. Shakspeare.

DINGLE. n. f. [from den, or din, a hollow, Saxon.] A hollow between hills;
a dale.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle or bushy dell of this wild wood;
And every bosky bourn from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood. Milton.

DININGROOM. n. f. [dine and room.]
The principal apartment of the house;
the room where entertainments are made.

He went out from the dining-room before he had fallen into error by the intemperance of his meat, or the deluge of drink. Taylor.

DINNER. n. f. [diner, French.] The chief meal; the meal eaten about the middle of the day.

Let me not stay a jot for dinner:
Go, get it ready. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Before dinner and supper, as often as it is convenient, or can be had, let the public prayers of the church, or some parts of them, be said publicly in the family. Taylor.

The jolly crew, unmindful of the past,
The quarry share, their plenteous dinner haste. Dryden's Æneid.

DINNER-TIME. n. f. [dinner and time.]
The time of dining.

At dinner-time,
I pray you, have in mind where we must meet. Shakspeare.

Then from the mint walks forth the man of rhyme,
Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. f. [dýnt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.
Much daunted with that dint her sense was daz'd;
Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Spenser.

Neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence; force; power.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

TO DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-dinted furrows in the batter'd mail:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary bone,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Donne.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.]
The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCE'SAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

I have heard it has been advised by a diocesan to his inferior clergy, that they should read some of the most celebrated sermons printed by others. Tatler.

DIOCESS. n. f. [diocesis; a Greek word, compounded of dià and diœnos.] The circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction; for this realm has two divisions, one into shires or counties, in respect of temporal policy; another into dioceses, in respect of jurisdiction ecclesiastical.

None ought to be admitted by any bishop, but such as have dwelt and remained in his diocesis a convenient time. Whitgift.

He should regard the bishop of Rome as the islanders of Jersey and Guernsey do him of Constance in Normandy, that is, nothing at all;
since by that French bishop's refusal to swear unto our king, those isles were annexed to the diocesis of Winchester. Raleigh's Essays.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prince, ruler of the church, and intrusted with a large diocesis, containing many particular cities, under the immediate government of their respective elders, and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

DIOPTRICAL. } n. f. [dioptricus.] Af-DIOPTRICK. } fording a medium for the sight; assisting the sight in the view of distant objects.

Being excellently well furnished with dioptrical glasses, he had not been able to see the sun spotted. Boyle.

View the asperities of the moon through a diop- trick glass, and venture at the proportion of her hills by their shadows. More.

DIOPTRICKS. n. f. A part of opticks, treating of the different refractions of the light passing through different mediums; as the air, water, glasses, &c. Harris.

DIORTHO'SIS. n. f. [διορθωσις, of διορθω, to make straight.] A chirurgical operation, by which crooked or distorted members are restored to their primitive and regular shape. Harris.

TO DIP. v. a. pret. dipped; part. dipped, or dipt. [dippan, Sax.; doopen, Dut.]

1. To immerge; to put into any liquor.
The person to be baptized may be dipped in water; and such an immersion or dipping ought to be made thrice, according to the canon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud

Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lover's blood. Dryden.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.

Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunci.

So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

2. To moisten; to wet.
And though not mortal, yet a cold shudd'ring
dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove Speaks thunder. Milton.

3. To be engaged in any affair.
When men are once dip't, what with the encouragements of sense, custom, facility, and shame of departing from what they have given themselves up to, they go on till they are stifled. L'Estrange.

In Richard's time, I doubt, he was a little dip't in the rebellion of the commons. Dryden.

4. To engage as a pledge: generally used for the first mortgage.

Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
Put out the principal in trusty hands,
Live on the use, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Persius.

TO DIP. v. n.

1. To sink; to immerge.
We have snakes in our cups, and in our dishes;
and whoever dips too deep will find death in the pot. L'Estrange.

2. To enter; to pierce.
The vulture dipping in Prometheus' side,
His bloody beak with his torn liver dyed. Granville.

3. To enter slightly into any thing.
When I think all the repetitions are struck out in a copy, I sometimes find more upon dip- ping in the first volume. Pope.

4. To take that which comes first; to choose by chance.

With what ill thoughts of Jove art thou possessed?
Wouldst thou prefer him to some man? Suppose
I dipp'd among the worst, and Staius chose? Dryden's Persius.

DIPCHICK. n. f. [from dip and chick.]
The name of a bird.

Dipchick is so named of his diving and little-ness. Carew.

DIPETALOUS. adj. [dis and petala.]
Having two flower leaves.

DIPHTHONG. n. f. [διφθωγ.] A coalition of two vowels to form one sound:
as, vain, leave, Cesar.

We see how many disputes the simple and ambiguous nature of vowels created among grammarians, and how it has begot the mistake concerning diphthongs: all that are properly so are syllables, and not diphthongs, as is intended to be signified by that word. Holder.

Make a diphthong of the second eta and iota, instead of their being two syllables, and the objection is gone. Pope.

DIPLOE. n. f. The inner plate or la-mina of the skull.

DIPLOMA. n. f. [διπλωμα.] A letter or writing conferring some privilege; so called, because they used formerly to be written on waxed tables, and folded together.

DIPPER. n. f. [from dip.] One that dips in the water.

DIPPING Needle. n. f. A device which shows a particular property of the mag-netick needle, so that, besides its pola-rity or verticity, which is its direction of altitude, or height above the horizon, when duly poised about an horizontal axis, it will always point to a determined degree of altitude, or elevation above the horizon, in this or that place respectively. Phillips.

DIPSAS. n. f. [Latin, from διψαω, to thirst.] A serpent, whose bite produces the sensation of unquenchable thirst.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphibiaena dire, Ceraustes horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear, And dipsas. Milton.

DIPLOTE. n. f. [διπλωτα.] A noun consisting of two cases only. Clark.

DIPTYCH. n. f. [διπτυχα, Lat. two leaves folded together.] A register of bishops and martyrs.

The commemoration of saints was made out of the diptychs of the church, as appears by multitudes of places in St. Austin. Stillingfleet.

DIRE. adj. [dirus, Lat.] Dreadful; dismal; mournful; horrible; terrible; evil in a great degree.

Women fight, To doft their dire distresses. Shakspeare.

More by intemperance die In meats, and drinks, which on the earth shall bring Diseases dire; of which a monstrous crew Before thee shall appear. Milton.

Hydras, and gorgons, and chimæras dire. Milton.

Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites, Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bites. Milton.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans, despair Tended the sick. Milton.

Discord! dire sister of the slaughter'd pow'r, Small at her birth, but rising ev'ry hour; While scarce the skies her horrid head can bound, She stalks on earth, and shakes the world around. Pope.

DIRECT. adj. [directus, Latin.]

1. Straight; not crooked.

2. Not oblique.

The ships would move in one and the same surface; and consequently must needs encounter when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross lines. Bentley.

3. [In astronomy.] Appearing to an eye on earth to move progressively through the zodiack; not retrograde.

Two geomantick figures were display'd Above his head, a warrior and a maid, One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden's Fables.

4. Not collateral: as, the grandson succeeds his grandfire in a direct line.

5. Apparently tending to some end, as in a straight line.

Such was as then the state of the king, as it was no time by direct means to seek her. And such was the state of his captivated will, as he would delay no time of seeking her. Sidney.

He that does this, will be able to cast off all that is superfluous; he will see what is pertinent, what coherent; what is direct to what slides by, the question. Locke.

6. Open; not ambiguous.

There be, that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved. Bacon.

7. Plain; exprefs.

He no where, that I know, says it in direct words. Locke.

To DIRECT. v. a. [dirigo, directum, Latin.]

1. To aim or drive in a straight line.

Two eagles from a mountain's height, By Jove's command, direct their rapid flight. Pope.

2. To point against, as a mark.

The spear flew hissing thro' the middle space, And pierc'd his throat, directed at his face. Dryd.

3. To regulate; to adjust.

It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Jeremiah.

Wisdom is profitable to direct. Ecclus.

All that is in a man's power, is to mind what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding; or else to direct and fort and call in such as he desires. Locke.

4. To prescribe certain measure; to mark out a certain course.

He directeth it under the whole heavens, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth. Jub.

5. To order; to command: to direct is a softer term than to command.

DIRECTER. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that directs; one that prescribes.

2. An instrument that serves to guide any manual operation.

DIRECTION. n. f. [directio, Latin.]

1. Aim at a certain point.

These men's opinions are not the product of judgment, or the consequence of reason; but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice, and without direction. Locke.

The direction of good works to a good end, is the only principle that distinguishes charity. Smalridge.

2. Tendency of motion impressed by a certain impulse.

No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles, that is, no body, can either move of itself, or of itself alter the direction of its motion. Cheyne.

3. Order; command; prescription.

From the counsel that St. Jerome giveth Læta, of taking heed how she read the apocrypha; as also by the help of other learned men's judgments, delivered in like case, we may take direction. Hooker.

Ev'n now

I put myself to thy direction. Shakspeare.

The nobles of the people digged it by the direction of the law-giver. Numbers.

Men's passions and God's direction seldom agree. King Charles.

General directions for scholastic disputers is, never to dispute upon mere trifles. Watts.

4. Regularity; adjustment.

All nature is but art unknown to thee; All chance, direction which thou canst not see. Pope.

DIRECTIVE. adj. [from direct.]

1. Having the power of direction.

A law therefore, generally taken, is a directive rule unto goodness of operation. Hooker.

A power of command there is without all question, though there be some doubt in what faculty this command doth principally reside, whether in the will or the understanding. The true resolution is, that the directive command for counsel is in the understanding; and the applicative command, or empire, for putting in execution of what is directed, is in the will. Bramhall against Hobbes.

On the directive powers of the former, and the regularity of the latter, whereby it is capable of direction, depends the generation of all bodies. Grew.

2. Informing; showing the way.

Nor visited by one directive ray, From cottage streaming, or from airy hall. Thomson.

DIRECTLY. adv. [from direct.]

1. In a straight line; rectilineally.

The more a body is nearer to the eyes, and the more directly it is opposed to them, the more it is enlightened; because the light languishes and lessens, the farther it removes from its proper source. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

There was no other place assigned to any of this matter, than that whereunto its own gravity bore it, which was only directly downwards, whereby it obtained that place in the globe, which was just underneath. Woodward.

If the refracted ray be returned directly back to the point of incidence, it shall be refracted by the incident ray. Newton's Opticks.

2. Immediately; apparently; without circumlocution; without any long train of consequence.

Infidels, being clean without the church, deny directly, and utterly reject, the very principles of christianity, which hereticks embrace erroneously by misconstruction. Hooker.

No man hath hitherto been so impious, as plainly and directly to condemn prayer. Hooker.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself enemies in the papists directly, because they have kept the scripture from us what they could. Dryden's Preface to Religio Laici.

His work directly tends to raise sentiments of honour and virtue in his readers. Addison.

No reason can be assigned, why it is best for the world that God Almighty hath absolute power, which doth not directly prove that no mortal man should have the like. Swift.

DIRECTNESS. n. f. [from direct.] Straightness; tendency to any point; the nearest way.

They argued from celestial causes only, the constant vicinity of the sun, and the directness of his rays; never suspecting that the body of the earth had so great an efficiency in the changes of the air. Bentley.

DIRECTOR. n. f. [director, Latin.]

1. One that has authority over others; a superintendent; one that has the general management of a design or work.

Himself stood director over them, with nodding or stamping, shewing he did like or dislike those things he did not understand. Sidney.

In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.

2. A rule; an ordinance.

Common forms were not design'd Directors to a noble mind. Swift.

3. An instructor; one who shows the proper methods of proceeding.

They are glad to use counsellors and directors in all their dealings of weight, as contracts, testaments. Hooker.

4. One who is consulted in cases of conscience.

I am her director and her guide in spiritual affairs. Dryden.

5. One appointed to transact the affairs of a trading company.

What made directors cheat in south-sea year. Pope.

6. An instrument in surgery, by which the hand is guided in its operation.

The manner of opening with a knife, is by sliding it on a director, the groove of which prevents its being misguided. Sharp's Surgery.

DIRECTORY. n. f. [from director.] The book which the factious preachers published in the rebellion for the direction of their sect in acts of worship.

As to the ordinance concerning the directory, we cannot consent to the taking away of the book of common prayer.

Oxford Reasons against the Cov.

DIREFUL. adj. [This word is frequent among the poets, but has been censured as not analogical: all other words compounded with full consisting of a substantive and full: as, dreadful, or full of dread; joyful, or full of joy.] Dire; dreadful; dismal.

Point of spear it never piercen would,
Ne dint of direful sword divide the substance could, Fairy Queen.

But yet at last, whereas the direful fiend
She saw not stir, off shaking vain affright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end;
Then God she pray'd, and thank'd her faithful knight. Fairy Queen.

Direful hap betide that hated wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee.
Shakspeare.

The voice of God himself speaks in the heart of men, whether they understand it or no; and by secret intimations gives the sinner a foretaste of that direful cup, which he is like to drink more deeply of hereafter. South.

I curs'd the direful author of my woes:
'Twas told again, and thence my ruin rose.
Dryden.

Achilles' wrath, to Greeks the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heavenly goddess! sing.
Pope.

DIR'NESS. n. f. [from dire.] Dismal-ness; horror; hideousness.

Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts, Cannot once start me. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

DIR'PTION. n. f. [direptio, Latin.] The act of plundering.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn
Dirige gressus meos, as some pretend;
but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verstegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obse-quies of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.

All due measures of her mourning kept,
Did office at the dirge, and by infection wept.
Dryden.

DIRIGENT. adj. [dirigens, Latin.]

The dirigent line in geometry is that along which the line describent is carried, in the generation of any figure. Harris.

DIRK. n. f. [an Erse word.] A kind of dagger used in the Highlands of Scotland.

In vain thy hungry mountaineers
Come forth in all their warlike geers,
The shield, the pistol, dirk, and dagger,
In which they daily wont to swagger. Tickel.

TO DIRKE. v. a. To spoil; to ruin. Obsolete.

Thy waste bigness but cumpers the ground,
And dirkes the beauties of my blossoms round.
Spenser.

DIRT. n. f. [dryt, Dutch; dirt, Island-dick.]

1. Mud; filth; mire; any thing that sticks to the clothes or body.

They, gilding dirt in noble verse,
Rustick philosophy rehearse. Denham.

Numbers engage their lives and labours to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end. Wake.

The sea rises as high as ever, though the great heaps of dirt it brings along with it are apt to choak up the shallows. Addison.

Mark by what wretched steps their glory grows;

From dirt and sea-weed as proud Venice rose:
In each how guilt and greatness equal ran,
And all that rais'd the hero sunk the man.
Pope.

Is yellow dirt the passion of thy life?
Look but on Gripus, or on Gripus' wife. Pope.

2. Meanness; fordidness.

TO DIRT. v. a. [from the noun.] To foul; to bemire; to make filthy; to bedaub; to soil; to pollute; to nasty.

Ill company is like a dog, who dirts those most whom he loves best. Swift.

DIRT-PIE. n. f. [dirt and pie.] Forms moulded by children of clay, in imitation of pastry.

Thou settest thy heart upon that which has newly left off making of dirt-pies, and is but preparing itself for a green-sickness. Suckling.

DIRTILY. adv. [from dirty.]

1. Nastily; foully; filthily.

2. Meanly; fordidly; shamefully.

Such gold as that wherewithal
Chimiques from each mineral
Are dirtily and desperately gull'd. Donne.

1. Nastiness; filthiness; foulness.

2. Meanness; baseness; fordidness.

DIRTY. adj. [from dirt.]

1. Foul; nasty; filthy.

Thy Dol and Helen of thy noble thoughts
Is in base durance, and contagious prison, Haul'd thither by mechanic, dirty hand. Shaksp.

2. Sullied; cloudy; not elegant.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one. Locke.

3. Mean; base; despicable.

Such employments are the diseases of labour, and the rust of time, which it contracts not by lying still, but by dirty employment. Taylor.

Marriages would be made up upon more natural motives than meer dirty interests, and increase of riches without measure or end. Temple.

They come at length to grow fots and epicures, mean in their discourses, and dirty in their practices. South.

TO DIRTY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To foul; to soil.

The lords Strutts lived generously, and never used to dirty their fingers with pen, ink, and counters. Arbutnot.

2. To disgrace; to scandalize.

DIRUPTION. n. f. [diruptio, Lat.]

1. The act of bursting, or breaking.

2. The state of bursting, or breaking.

Dis. An inseparable particle used in composition, implying commonly a privative or negative signification of the word to which it is joined: as, to arm, to disarm; to join, to disjoin. It is borrowed from des, used by the French and Spaniards in this sense: as, desnoier, to untie; desterrar, to banish: from the Latin de; as, struo, to build; destruo, to destroy.

DISABILITY. n. f. [from disable.]

1. Want of power to do any thing; weakness; impotence.

Our consideration of creatures, and attention unto scriptures, are not in themselves things of like disability to breed or beget faith. Hooker.

Many withdrew themselves out of pure faintness, and disability to attend the conclusion.
Raleigh.

He that knows most of himself, knows least of his knowledge, and the exercised understanding is conscious of its disability. Glanville.

The ability of mankind does not lie in the impotency or disabilities of brutes. Locke.

2. Want of proper qualifications for any purpose; legal impediment.

A suit is commenced in a temporal court for an inheritance; and the defendant pleads, in disability, that the plaintiff is a bastard.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

This disadvantage, which the dissenters at present lie under, of a disability to receive church preferments, will be easily remedied by the repeal of the test. Swift.

TO DISA'BLE. v. a. [dis and able.]

1. To deprive of force; to weaken; to disqualify for any act.

The invasion and rebellion did not only dis- able this king to be a conqueror, but deprived him both of his kingdom and life. Davies.

Nor so is overcome

Satan, whose fall from heaven, a deadlier bruise
Disabled not to give thee thy death's wound.
Milton.

A christian's life is a perpetual exercise, a wrestling and warfare, for which sensual pleasure disables him, by yielding to that enemy, with whom he must strive. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. To hinder from action: used of things.

I have known a great fleet disabled for two months, and thereby lose great occasions by an indisposition of the admiral. Temple.

3. To impair; to diminish.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance.
Shakspeare.

4. To deprive of usefulness or efficacy.

Farewel, Monsieur Traveller; look you list, and wear strange suits; disable all the benefits of your own country. Shakspeare.

Your days I will alarm, I'll haunt your nights,
And worse than age disable your delights. Dryd.

5. To exclude, as wanting proper qualifications.

I will not disable any for proving a scholar, nor yet dissemble that I have seen many happily forced upon the course to which by nature they seemed much indisposed. Watson.

TO DISABUSE. v. a. [dis and abuse.] To set free from a mistake; to disentangle from a fallacy; to set right; to undeceive.

The imposture and fallacy of our senses impose not only on common heads, but even more refined mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse you. Glanv. Sceptic.

Those teeth fair Lyce must not show,
If she would bite: her lovers, though
Like birds they stoop at seeming grapes,
Are disabus'd when first she gapes. Waller.

If by simplicity you meant a general defect in those that profess angling, I hope to disabuse you.
Walton's Angler.

Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;
Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd. Pope.

DISACCOMMODATION. n. f. [dis and ac- commodation.] The state of being unfit or unprepared.

Devastations have happened in some places more than in others, according to the accommodation or disaccommodation of them to such calamities. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO DISACCU'STOM. v. a. [dis and accus- tom.] To destroy the force of habit by disuse or contrary practice.

TO DISACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [dis and acknowledge.] Not to acknowledge.

The manner of denying Christ's deity here prohibited, was, by words and oral expressions verbally to deny and disacknowledge it. South.

DISACQUAINTANCE. n. f. [dis and acquaintance.] Disuse of familiarity.

Conscience, by a long neglect of, and disacquaintance with itself, contracts an inveterate rust or foil. South.

DISADVANTAGE. n. f. [dis and advantage.]

1. Loss; injury to interest: as, he sold to disadvantage.

2. Diminution of any thing desirable, as credit, fame, honour.

Chaucer in many things resembled Ovid, and that with no disadvantage on the side of the modern author. Dryden.

The most shining merit goes down to posterity with disadvantage, when it is not placed by writers in its proper light. Addison.

Those parts already published give reason to think, that the Iliad will appear with no disadvantage to that immortal poem. Addison.

Their testimony will not be of much weight to its disadvantage, since they are liable to the common objection of condemning what they did not understand. Swift.

3. A state not prepared for defence.

No fort can be so strong,
Ne fleshly breast can armed be so found,
But will at last be won with batt'ry long,
Or unawares at disadvantage found. Fairy Queen.

To DISADVANTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure in interest of any kind.

All other violences are so far from advancing christianity, that they extremely weaken and disadvantage it. Decay of Piety.

DISADVANTAGEABLE. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to profit; producing loss. Not used.

In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long; for hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest. Bacon.

DISADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [from disadvantage.] Contrary to interest; contrary to convenience; unfavourable.

A multitude of eyes will narrowly inspect every part of an eminent man, consider him nicely in all views, and not be a little pleased when they have taken him in the worst and most disadvantageous lights. Addison.

DISADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [from disadvantageous.] In a manner contrary to interest or profit; in a manner not favourable.

An approving nod or smile serves to drive you on, and make you display yourselves more disadvantageously. Gov. of the Tongue.

DISADVANTAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from disadvantageous.] Contrariety to profit; inconvenience; mischief; loss.

DISADVENTUROUS. adj. [dis and adventurous.] Unhappy; unprosperous.

Now he hath left you here,
To be the record of his rueful loss,
And of my doleful disadventurous death. F. Qu.

To DISAFFECT. v. a. [dis and affect.] To fill with discontent; to discontent; to make less faithful or zealous.

They had attempted to disaffect and discontent his majesty's late army. Clarendon.

DISAFFECTED. part. adj. [from disaffect.] Not disposed to zeal or affection. Usually applied to those who are enemies to the government.

By denying civil worship to the emperor's statues, which the custom then was to give, they were proceeded against as disaffected to the emperor. Stillingfleet.

DISAFFECTEDLY. adv. [from disaffected.]

After a disaffected manner;

DISAFFECTEDNESS. n. f. [from disaffected.]

The quality of being disaffected.

DISAFFECTION. n. f. [from disaffect.]

1. Dislike; ill-will.

In making laws, princes must have regard to the public dispositions, to the affections and disaffections of the people; and must not introduce a law with public scandal and displeasure. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

2. Want of zeal for the government; want of ardour for the reigning prince.

In this age, every thing disliked by those who think with the majority, is called disaffection. Swift.

3. Disorder; bad constitution: in a physical sense.

The disease took its original merely from the disaffection of the part, and not from the peccancy of the humours. Wiseman.

DISAFFIRMANCE. n. f. [dis and affirm.]

Confutation; negation.

That kind of reasoning which reduceth the opposite conclusion to something that is apparently absurd, is a demonstration in disaffirmance of any thing that is affirmed. Hale.

To DISAFFOREST. v. a. [dis and forest.]

To throw open to common purposes; to reduce from the privileges of a forest to the state of common ground.

The commissioners of the treasury moved the king to disafforest some forests of his, explaining themselves of such forests as lay out of the way, not near any of the king's houses. Bacon.

How happy 's he, which hath due place assigned
To his beasts; and disafforested his mind! Donne.

To DISAGREE. v. n. [dis and agree.]

1. To differ; not to be the same.

The mind clearly and infallibly perceives all distinct ideas to disagree; that is, the one not to be the other. Locke.

2. To differ; not to be of the same opinion.

Why both the bands in worship disagree,
And some adore the flow'r, and some the tree. Dryden.

3. To be in a state of opposition: followed by from or with, before the opposite.

It containeth many improprieties, disagreeing almost in all things from the true and proper description. Brown.

Strange it is, that they reject the plainest sense of scripture, because it seems to disagree with what they call reason. Atterbury.

DISAGREEABLE. adj. [from disagree.]

1. Contrary; unsuitable.

Some demon, an enemy to the Greeks, had forced her to a conduct disagreeable to her sincerity. Broome.

2. Unpleasing; offensive.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, either agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

DISAGREEABLENESS. n. f. [from disagreeable.]

1. Unsuitableness; contrariety.

2. Unpleasantness; offensiveness.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son, for all the dirt and foulness of his cloaths; the dearness of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit. South.

DISAGREEMENT. n. f. [from disagree.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; diversity; not identity; not likeness.

These carry such plain and evident notes and characters, either of disagreement or affinity with one another, that the several kinds of them are easily distinguished. Woodward.

2. Difference of opinion; contrariety of sentiments.

They seemed one to cross another, as touching their several opinions about the necessity of sacraments, whereas in truth their disagreement is not great. Hooker.

To DISALLOW. v. a. [dis and allow.]

1. To deny authority to any.

When, said she,
Were those first councils disallow'd by me?
Or where did I at sure tradition strike,
Provided still it were apostolic? Dryden.

2. To consider as unlawful; not to permit.

Their usual kind of disputing sheweth, that they do not disallow only these Romish ceremonies which are unprofitable, but count all unprofitable which are Romish. Hooker.

3. To censure by some posterior act.

It was known that the most eminent of those who professed his own principles, publicly disallowed his proceedings. Swift.

4. To censure; not to justify.

There is a secret, inward foreboding fear, that some evil or other will follow the doing of that which a man's own conscience disallows him in. South.

To DISALLOW. v. n. To refuse permission; not to grant; not to make or suppose lawful.

God doth in converts, being married, allow continuance with infidels, and yet disallow that the faithful, when they are free, should enter into bonds of wedlock with such. Hooker.

DISALLOWABLE. adj. [from disallow.]

Not allowable; not to be suffered.

DISALLOWANCE. n. f. [from disallow.]

Prohibition:

God accepts of a thing suitable for him to receive, and for us to give, where he does not declare his refusal and disallowance of it. South.

To DISANCHOR. v. a. [from dis and anchor.] To drive a ship from its anchor.

To DISANIMATE. v. a. [dis and animate.]

1. To deprive of life.

2. To discourage; to deject; to depress.

The presence of a king engenders love amongst his subjects and his loyal friends, as it disanimates his enemies. Shakspeare.

He was confounded and disanimated at his presence, and added, How can the servant of my lord talk with my lord? Boyle.

DISANIMATION. n. f. [from disanimate.]

Privation of life.

They cannot in reason retain that apprehension after death, as being affections which depend on life, and depart upon disanimation. Brown.

To DISANNU'L. v. a. [dis and annul.]

This word is formed, contrarily to analogy, by those who, not knowing the meaning of the word annul, intended to form a negative sense by the needless use of the negative particle. It ought therefore to be rejected, as ungrammatical and barbarous.] To annul; to deprive of authority; to vacate; to make null; to make void; to nullify.

The Jews ordinances for us to resume, were to check our Lord himself, which hath disannulled them. Hooker.

That gave him power of disannulling of laws, and disposing of men's fortunes and estates, and the like points of absolute power, being in themselves harsh and odious. Bacon.

To be in both worlds full,
Is more than God was, who was hungry here:
Wouldst thou his laws of fasting disannul? Herbert.

Wilt thou my judgments disannul? Defame
My equal rule, to clear thyself of blame? Sandys.

DISANNU'LEMENT. n. f. [from disannul.]
The act of making void.

To DISAPPEAR. v. n. [disparoitre, Fr.]
To be lost to view; to vanish out of sight; to fly; to go away.

She disappear'd, and left me dark! I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore. Milton.

When the night and winter disappear,
The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring. Dryden.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Criticks I saw that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place;
Their own, like others, soon their place resign'd,
Or disappear'd, and left the first behind. Pope.

To DISAPPOINT. v. a. [dis and appoint.]
1. To defeat of expectation; to balk; to hinder from something expected.

The superior Being can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes. Tillotson.

Whilst the champion, with redoubled might,
Strikes home the jav'lin, his retiring foe Shrinks from the wound, and disappoints the blow. Addison.

There's nothing like surprising the rogues:
how will they be disappointed, when they hear that thou hast prevented their revenge! Arbuth.

We are not only tortured by the reproaches which are offered us, but are disappointed by the silence of men when it is unexpected, and humbled even by their praises. Addison.

2. It has of before the thing lost by disappointment.

The Janizaries, disappointed by the bassas of the spoil, received of the bounty of Solymán a great largess. Knolles.

DISAPPOINTMENT. n. f. [from disap-point.] Defeat of hopes; miscarriage of expectations.

It is impossible for us to know what are calamities, and what are blessings. How many accidents have pass'd for misfortunes, which have turned to the welfare and prosperity of the persons in whose lot they have fallen! How many disappointments have, in their consequences, saved a man from ruin! Spectator.

If we hope for things, of which we have not thoroughly considered the value, our disappointment will be greater than our pleasure in the fruition of them. Addison.

DISAPPROBATION. n. f. [dis and approbation.] Censure; condemnation; expression of dislike.

He was obliged to publish his letters, to shew his disapprobation of the publishing of others. Pope.

To DISAPPROVE. v. a. [desapprouver, French.]

1. To dislike; to censure.
I reason'd much, alas! but more I lov'd;
Sent and recall'd, ordain'd and disapprov'd. Prior.

Without good breeding truth is disapprov'd;
That only makes superior sense below'd. Pope.

2. To reject as disliked; not to confirm by concurrence.

A project for a treaty of barrier with the States was transmitted hither from Holland, and was disapproved of by our courts. Swift.

DISARD. n. f. [dirr, dirr, Saxon, a fool, Skinner; diseur, French, Junius.]

A prattler; a boasting talker. This word is inserted both by Skinner and Junius; but I do not remember it.

To DISARM. v. a. [disarmer, French.]

1. To spoil or divest of arms; to deprive of arms.

An order was made by both houses, for disarming all the papists in England. Clarendon.

I am still the same,
By different ways still moving to one fame;
And by disarming you I now do more
To save the town, than arming you before. Dryden.

2. It has of before the arms taken away.

They would be immediately disarmed of their great magazine of artillery. Locke.

To DISARRAY. v. a. [dis and array.]

To undress any one; to divest of clothes.

So, as she bad, the witch they disarray'd.
Fairy Queen.

Now night is come, now soon her disarray,
And in her bed her lay. Spenser.

DISARRA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disorder; confusion; loss of the regular order of battle.

He returned towards the river, to prevent such danger as the disarray, occasioned by the narrowness of the bridge, might cast upon them. Hayward.

Disarray and shameful rout ensue,
And force is added to the fainting crew. Dryden.

2. Undress.

DISASSIDU'ITY. n. f. Absence of care or attention.

The Cecilians kept him back; as very well knowing that, upon every little absence or disassiduity, he should be subject to take cold at his back. Wotton.

DISASTER. n. f. [disastre, Fr.]

1. The blast or stroke of an unfavourable planet.

Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood
fall;
Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse. Shakspeare.

2. Misfortune; grief; mishap; misery;
calamity.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care;
Some dire disaster, or by force or flight;
But what, or where, the fates have wrapt in night
Pope.

To DISASTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To blast by the stroke of an unfavourable star.

Ah, chaste bed of mine, said she, which never heretofore couldst accuse me of one defiled thought, how canst thou now receive that dis-aster'd changeling. Sidney.

2. To afflict; to mischief.

These are the holes where eyes should be,
which pitifully disaster the cheeks. Shakspeare.
In his own fields, the swain
Disaster'd stands. Thomson.

DISASTROUS. adj. [from disaster.]

1. Unlucky; not fortunate.

That seemeth a most disastrous day to the Scots, not only in regard of this overthrow, but for that upon the same day they were defeated by the English at Floodenfield. Hayward.

2. Gloomy; threatening misfortune.

The moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton.

3. Unhappy; calamitous; miserable; struck with affliction.

Then Juno, pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

Immediately after his return from this very expedition, such disastrous calamities befel his family, that he burnt two of his children himself. South.

Fly the pursuit of my disastrous love;
From my unhappy neighbourhood remove. Dryden.

DISASTROUSLY. adv. [from disastrous.]
In a dismal manner.

DISASTROUSNESS. n. f. [from disastrous.] Unluckiness; unfortunateness. DiE.

To DISAVOUC'H. v. a. [dis and vouch.]

To retract profession; to disown.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience or support. Daniel.

To DISAVO'W. v. a. [dis and vow.] To disown; to deny knowledge of; to deny concurrence in any thing, or with any person.

The heirs and posterity of them which yielded the same, are either ignorant thereof, or do wilfully deny, or steadfastly disavow it. Spenser.

The English did believe his name was therein abused; which he manifested to be true, by dis-avowing it openly afterwards. Hayward.

To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, and generally when a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. Bacon.

A man that acts below his rank, doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and deth but teach others to envy him. Bacon.

He only does his conquest disavow,
And thinks too little what they found too much. Dryden.

We are reminded by the ceremony of taking an oath, that it is a part of that obedience which we learn from the gospel, expressly to disavow
all evasions and mental reservations whatsoever. Addison's Freeholder.

DISAVO'WAL. n. f. [from disavow.]
Denial.

An earnest disavowal of fear often proceeds from fear. Clarissa.

DISAVO'WMENT. n. f. [from disavow.]
Denial.

As touching the Tridentine history, his holiness will not press you to any disavow-ment thereof. Wotton.

To DISAUTHORIZE. v. a. [dis and anthorize.] To deprive of credit or authority.

1. To dismiss from military service; to break up an army; to dismiss soldiers from their colours.

They disbanded themselves, and returned every man to his own dwelling. Knolles' History.

Pythagoras bids us in our station stand,
Till God, our general, shall us disband. Denham.

I am content to lead a private life;
Disband my army to secure the state. Dryden.

Bid him disband his legions. Addison's Cato.

2. To spread abroad; to scatter.

Some imagine that a quantity of water, sufficient to make such a deluge, was created upon that occasion; and, when the business was done, all disbanded again, and annihilated. Woodward.

To DISBA'ND. v. n.

1. To retire from military service; to separate; to break up.

Our navy was upon the point of disbanding, and many of our men come ashore. Bacon.

The rang'd pow'rs
Disband, and wand'ring, each his several way Pursues. Milton.

The common soldiers, and inferior officers, should be fully paid upon their disbanding. Clarendon.

Were it not for some small remainders of piety and virtue, which are yet left scattered among mankind, human society would in a short space disband and run into confusion, and the earth would grow wild and become a forest. Tillotson.

2. To be dissolved.

While rocks stand,
And rivers stir, thou canst not shrink or quail;
Yea, when both rocks and all things shall disband,
Then shalt thou be my rock and tower. Herbert.

To DISBA'RK. v. a. [debarquer, French.]

To land from a ship; to put on shore.

Together sail'd they, fraught with all the things

To service done by land that might belong,

The ship we moor on these obscure abodes;
Disbark the sheep, an offering to the gods. Pope's Odyssey.

DISBELI'EF. n. f. [from disbelieve.] Refusal of credit; denial of belief.

Our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter the nature of the thing. Tillotson.

To DISBELI'VE. v. a. [dis and believe.]

Not to credit; not to hold true.

The thinking it impossible his sins should be forgiven, though he should be truly penitent, is a sin, but rather of infidelity than despair; it being the disbelieving of an eternal truth of God's. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Such who profess to disbelieve a future state, are not always equally satisfied with their own reasonings. Atterbury.

From a fondness to some vices, which the doctrine of futurity rendered uneasy, they brought themselves to doubt of religion; or, out of a vain affectation of seeing farther than other men, pretended to disbelieve it. Rogers.

DISBELI'EVER. n. f. [from disbelieve.]

One who refuses belief; one who denies any position to be true.

An humble soul is frighted into sentiments, because a man of great name pronounces heresy upon the contrary sentiments, and casts the disbeliever out of the church. Watts.

To DISBENCH. v. a. [dis and bench.] To drive from a seat.

Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not?

—No, sir; yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words. Shakespeare.

To DISBRA'NCH. v. a. [dis and branch.]

To separate, or break off, as a branch from a tree.

She that herself will fliver and disbranch
From her maternal sap, perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Such as are newly planted need not be disbranched till the sap begins to stir, that so the wound may be healed without the fear. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To DISBU'D. v. a. [With gardeners.] To take away the branches or sprigs newly put forth, that are ill placed. Diſ.

We shall disburden the piece of those hard shadowings, which are always ungraceful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To throw off a burden.

Better yet do I live, that though by my thoughts I be plunged Into my life's bondage, I yet may disburden a passion. Sidney.

Lucia, disburden all thy cares on me,
And let me share thy most retir'd distress. Addison's Cato.

To DISBURDEN. v. n. To ease the mind.

To DISBURSE. v. a. [debourser, Fr.]

To spend or lay out money.

Money is not disbursed at once, but drawn into a long length, by sending over now twenty thousand, and next half year ten thousand pounds. Spenser.

Nor would we deign him burial for his men,
Till he disburs'd ten thousand dollars. Shaksp.

As Alexander received great sums, he was no less generous and liberal in disbursing of them. Arbuthnot on Coins.

DISBURSEMENT. n. f. [deboursement, French.]

1. Act of disbursing or laying out.

The queen's treasure, in so great occasions of disbursements, is not always so ready, nor so plentiful, as it can spare so great a sum together. Spenser's Ireland.

2. Sum spent.

DISBURSER. n. f. [from disburse.] One that disburses.

DISCALCEATED. adj. [discalceatus, Latin.] Stripped of shoes.

DISCALCEATION. n. f. [from discalceated.] The act of pulling off the shoes.

The custom of discalceation, or putting off their shoes, at meals, is conceived to have been done, as by that means keeping their beds clean. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DISCANDY. v. n. [dis and candy.] To dissolve; to melt.

The hearts
That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave

On blossoming Cæsar. Shakespeare.

To DISCARD. v. a. [dis and card.]

1. To throw out of the hand such cards as are useless.

2. To dismiss or eject from service or employment.

These men being certainly jewels to a wise man, considering what wonders they were able to perform, yet were discarded by that unworthy prince, as not worthy the holding. Sidney.

Their captains, if they list, discard whom they please, and send away such as will perhaps willingly be rid of that dangerous and hard service. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Should we own that we have a very imperfect idea of substance, would it not be hard to charge us with discarding substance out of the world? Locke.

Justice discards party, friendship, kindred, and is always therefore represented as blind. Addison's Guardian.

They blame the favourites, and think it nothing extraordinary that the queen should be at an end of her patience, and resolve to discard them. Swift.

I do not conceive why a sunk discarded party, who neither expect nor desire more than a quiet life, should be charged with endeavouring to introduce popery. Swift.

DISCARNATE. adj. [dis, and caro, flesh; scarnato, Ital.] Stripped of flesh.

'Tis better to own a judgment, though but with a curta suppellex of coherent notions; than a memory like a sepulchre, furnished with a load of broken and discarnate bones. Glanville.

To DISCASE. v. a. [dis and case.] To strip; to undress.

Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell:
I will discase me, and myself present. Shaksp.

And behold among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding. Proverbs.

2. To judge; to have knowledge of by comparison.

What doth better become wisdom than to discern what is worthy the loving? Sidney.

Does any here know me? This is not Lear:
Does Lear walk thus, speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his motion weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied. Shakespeare.

You should be rul'd and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To distinguish.

To discern such buds as are fit to produce blossoms, from such as will display themselves but in leaves, is no difficult matter. Boyle.

4. To make the difference between.

They follow virtue for reward to-day;
To-morrow vice, if she give better pay:
We are so good, or bad, just at a price;
For nothing else discerns the virtue or vice. Ben Jonson.

To DISCERN. v. n.

1. To make distinction.

Great part of the country was abandoned to the spoils of the soldiers, who not troubling themselves to discern between a subject and a rebel, whilst their liberty lasted, made indifferently profit of both. Hayward.

The custom of arguing on any side, even against our persuasions, dims the understanding, and makes it by degrees lose the faculty of discerning between truth and falsehood. Locke.

2. To have judicial cognizance. Not in use.

It discerneth of forces, frauds, crimes various of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon.

DISCERNER. n. f. [from discern.]

1. Discoverer; he that descries.

'Twas said they saw but one; and no discerner

Durst wag his tongue in censure. Shakespeare.

2. Judge; one that has the power of distinguishing.

He was a great observer and discerner of men's natures and humours, and was very dexterous in compliance, where he found it useful. Clarendon.

How unequal discerners of truth they are, and easily exposed unto error, will appear by their unqualified intellectuals. Brown's Vul. Err.

DISCERNIBLE. adj. [from discern.] Discoverable; perceptible; distinguishable; apparent.

It is indeed a sin of so gross, so formidable a bulk, that there needs no help of opticks to render it discernible, and therefore I need not farther expatiate on it. Government of the Tongue.

All this is easily discernible by the ordinary discourses of the understanding. South.

DISCERNIBLENESS. n. f. [from discernible.] Visibleness.

Exodus.

He, fugitive, declin'd superior strength;
Discomfited, pursued, in the sad chace
Ten thousand ignominious fall.
Philips.

While my gallant countrymen are employed in pursuing rebels half discomfited through the consciousness of their guilt, I shall improve those victories to the good of my fellow subjects.
Addison.

DISCOMFIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Defeat; rout; overthrow.

Fly you must: incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present party.
Shakspeare.

Dagon must stoop, and shall ere long receive
Such a discomfit, as shall quite despoil him
Of all these boasted trophies.
Milton's Agonistes.

DISCOMFITURE. n. f. [from discomfit.]

Defeat; loss of battle; rout; ruin; overthrow.

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture.
Shakspeare.

Behold every man's sword was against his fellow, and there was a very great discomfiture.
1 Samuel.

What a defeat and discomfiture is it to a man, when he comes to use this wealth, to find it all false metal! Government of the Tongue.

He sent his angels to fight for his people; and the discomfiture and slaughter of great hosts is attributed to their assistance. Atterbury.

DISCOMFORT. n. f. [dis and comfort.]

Uneasiness; sorrow; melancholy; gloom.

This himself did foresee, and therefore armed his church, to the end they might sustain it without discomfort. Hooker.

Discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speak of nothing but despair.

Shakespeare.

In solitude there is not only discomfort, but weakness also. South.

To DISCOMFORT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To grieve; to sadden; to deject.

Her champion went away discomforted as much as discomfited. Sidney.

His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Left it discomfort us. Shakespeare.

DISCOMFORTABLE. adj. [from discomfort.]

1. That is melancholy and refuses comfort.

Discomfortable cousin know'st thou not
That when the searching eye of Heav'n is hid Behind the globe, it lights the lower world? Shakespeare.

2. That causes sadness.

What! did that help poor Dorus, whose eyes could carry unto him no other news but discomfortable? Sidney.

To DISCOMMEND. v. a. [dis and commend.] To blame; to censure; to mention with disapprobation.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve, either willingness to live or forwardness to die. Hooker.

Now you will all be wits; and he, I pray,
And you, that discommend it, mend the play. Denham.

Neither do I discommend the lofty style in tragedy, which is naturally pompous and magnificent. Dryden.

DISCOMMENDABLE. adj. [from discommend.] Blamable; censurable; deserving blame.

Puffanimity is, according to Aristotle's morality, a vice very discommendable. Ayliffe's Par.

So many thousand soldiers, unfit for any labour, or other trade, must either seek service and employment abroad, which may be dangerous; or else employ themselves here at home, which may be discommodious. Spenser on Ireland.

DISCOMMODITY. n. f. [from discommode.] Inconvenience; disadvantage; hurt; mischief.

We speak now of usury, how the discommodities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained: or how, in the balance of commodities and discommodities, the qualities of usury are to be reconciled. Bacon.

It is better that a ship should be preserved with some discommody to the sailors, than that, the sailors being in health, the ship should perish. Harward.

To DISCOMPOSE. v. a. [décomposer, French.]

1. To disorder; to unsettle.

The debate upon the self-denying ordinance had raised many jealousies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them. Clarendon.

2. To ruffle; to disorder.

Now Betty from her master's bed had flown,
And softly stole to discompose her own. Swift.

3. To disturb the temper; to agitate by perturbation.

No more, dear mother: ill in death it shows,
Your peace of mind by rage to discompose. Dryd.

4. To offend; to fret; to vex.

Men, who possess all the advantages of life, are in a state where there are many accidents to disorder and discompose, but few to please them. Swift.

5. To displace; to discard. Not in use.

Though he was a dark prince, and infinitely suspicious, he never put down or discomposed a counsellor or near servant. Bacon.

DISCOMPOSURE. n. f. [from discompose.]

Disorder; perturbation.

He threw himself upon his bed, lamenting with much passion, and with abundance of tears; and continued in this melancholick discomposure of mind many days. Clarendon.

To DISCONCERT. v. a. [dis and concert.]

1. To unsettle the mind; to discompose.

You need not provoke their spirits by outrages: a careless gesture, a word, or a look, is enough to disconcert them. Collier.

2. To break a scheme; to defeat a machination.

DISCONFORMITY. n. f. [dis and conformity.] Want of agreement; inconsistency.

Lyes arise from error and mistake, or malice and forgery; they consist in the disagreement and disconformity betwixt the speech and the conception of the mind, or the conception of the mind and the things themselves, or the speech and the things. Hakewill on Providence.

DISCONGRUITY. n. f. [dis and congruity.]

Disagreement; inconsistency.

There is want of capacity in the thing, to sustain such a duration, from the intrinſical discongruity of the one to the other. Hale.

DISCONSOLATE. adj. [dis and console.]

Void of comfort; hopeless; sorrowful; melancholy.

See Cassius all disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill. Shaks.

If patiently thy bidding they obey, Dismiss them not disconsolate. Milton.

The ladies and the knights, no shelter nigh,
Were dropping wet, disconsolate and wan,
And through their thin array receiv'd the rain. Dryden.

The moon reflects the sunbeams to us, and so, by illuminating the air, takes away in some measure the disconsolate darkness of our winter nights. Ray.

DISCONSOLATELY. adv. [from disconsolate.]

In a disconsolate manner; comfortlessly.

DISCONSOLATENESS. n. f. [from disconsolate.]

The state of being disconsolate.

DISCONTENT. n. f. [dis and content.]

Want of content; uneasiness at the present state.

I see your brows full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrows, and your eyes of tears. Shakespeare.

Not that their pleasures caus'd her discontent,
She sigh'd, not that they stay'd, but that the went. Pope.

DISCONTENT. adj. [dis and content.] Uneasy at the present state; dissatisfied.

They were of their own nature circumspect and slow, discountenanced and discontent; and those the earl singled as fittest for his purpose. Huyward.

To DISCONTENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To dissatisfy; to make uneasy at the present state.

I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit. Shakespeare.

The discontented now are only they Whose crimes before did your just cause betray. Dryden.

DISCONTENTED. participial adj. [from discontent.] Uneasy; cheerless; malevolent.

Let us know

What will tie up your discontented sword. Shaks.

These are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world; a diseased body, and a discontented mind. Tillotson.

The goddess, with a discontented air,
Seems to reject him, tho' she grants his pray'r. Pope.

DISCONTENTEDNESS. n. f. [from discontented.] Uneasiness; want of ease; dissatisfaction.

A beautiful bust of Alexander the Great casts up his face to heaven with a noble air of grief, or discontentedness, in his looks. Addison.

DISCONTENTMENT. n. f. [from discontent.] The state of being discontented; uneasiness.

These are the vices that fill them with general discontentment, as though the bosom of that famous church, wherein they live, were more noisome than any dungeon. Hooker.

The politick and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentments. Bacon.

DISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [from discontinue.]

1. Want of cohesion of parts; want of union of one part with another; disruption.

The fillicides of water, if there be enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops, which is the figure that saveth the body most from discontinuance. Bacon.

2. Cessation; intermission.

Let us consider whether our approaches to him are sweet and refreshing, and if we are uneasy under any long discontinuance of our conversation with him. Atterbury.

3. [In the common law.] An interruption or breaking off; as discontinuance of possession, or discontinuance of process.

The effect of discontinuance of possession is, that a man may not enter upon his own land or tenement alienated, whatsoever his right be unto it, or by his own authority; but must seek to recover possession by law. The effect of discontinuance of plea is, that the instance may not be taken up again, but by a new writ to begin the suit afresh. Cowell.

DISCONTINUATION. n. f. [from discontinue.] Disruption of continuity; breach of union of parts; disruption; separation.

Upon any discontinuation of parts, made either by bubbles, or by shaking the glass, the whole mercury falls. Newton.

To DISCONTINUE. v. n. [discontinuer, Fr.]

1. To lose the cohesion of parts; to suffer separation or disruption of substance.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn, or thread; have in them the appetite of not discontinuing strong, which maketh them follow the force that pulleth them out, and yet so as not to discontinue or forsake their own body. Bacon.

2. To lose an established or prescriptive custom or right.

Thyself shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee, and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies. Jeremiah.

To DISCONTINUE. v. a.

1. To leave off; to cease any practice or habit.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakspeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these inconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger = reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n finds means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakspeare.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakspeare.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is sound alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music: for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune, Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakspeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords
She maketh the sweetest harmony! Peacham.

To DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin.] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. } n. f. [from discord.]
DISCORDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.
Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

To DISCOVER. v. a. [découvrir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To show; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

2. To expose to view.

The cover of the coach was made with such joints, that as they might, to avoid the weather, pull it up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open-lighted as on horseback. Sidney.

Go draw aside the curtains and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. Shakspeare.
He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death. Job.

3. To show; not to shelter; to expose.

And now will I discover her lewdness. Hosea.
Law can discover sin, but not remove. Milton.

4. To make known; not to disguise; to reveal.

We will pass over unto those men, and we will discover ourselves unto them. Isaiah.

Yet all had heard, with audible lament Discover'd from the place of her retire. Milton.

5. To ken; to espy.

When we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand. Aëis.

6. To find out; to obtain information.

He shall never, by any alteration in me, discover my knowledge of his mistake. Pope's Lett.

7. To detect; to find though concealed.

Up he starts,
Discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakspeare.
Another part in squadrons bend their march
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discovered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glitt'ring spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover fights of woe. Milton.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCOVERER. n. f. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Holder.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverer, from observations made upon the people. Broome.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that set such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakspeare.

DISCOVERY. n. f. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,
Than the bold English none more fame have won;

Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,
They made discoveries where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

It would be necessary to say something of the state to which the war hath reduced us; such a discovery ought to be made as late as possible.

Swift.

To DISCO'UNSEL. v. a. [dis and counsel.]

To dissuade; to give contrary advice. Obsolete.

But him that palmer from that vanity,
With temperate advice discounselled.

Spenser.

Dr'sCOUNT. n. s. [dis and count.] The sum refunded in a bargain.

His whole intention was, to buy a certain quantity of copper money from Wood, at a large discount, and sell them as well as he could.

Swift.

To DISCOU'NT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To count back; to pay back again.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:

My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of heaven to charge the bill on me.

Dryden.

The farmers, spitefully combin'd,
Force him to take his tithes in kind;
And Parvifol discounts arrears
By bills for taxes and repairs.

Swift.

To DISCOU'NTENANCE. v. a. [dis and countenance.]

1. To discourage by cold treatment.

Unwilling they were to discountenance any man who was willing to serve them.

Atterb.

2. To abash; to put to shame.

Wisdom, in discourse with her,
Loses discountenanc'd, and like folly shews.

Milton.

He came, and with him Eve, more loth, tho' first
To offend; discountenanc'd both and discompos'd.

Milton.

How would one look from his majestic brow,
Seated as on the top of virtue's hill,
Discount'nance her despis'd!

Milton.

DISCOU'NTENANCE. n. s. [dis and countenance.] Cold treatment; unfavourable aspect; unfriendly regard.

He thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit.

Clarendon.

All accidental misfortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent discountenance.

Clarendon.

In expectation of the hour of judgment, he patiently bears all the difficulties of duty, and the discountenance he meets with from a wicked and prophane world.

Rogers.

DISCOU'NTENANCER. n. s. [from discountenance.] One that discourages by cold treatment; one that depresses by unfriendly regard.

Rumours of scandal, and murmurs against the king, and his government, taxed him for a great taxer of his people, and discountenancer of his nobility.

Bacon.

To DISCOURAGE. v. a. [décourager, French; dis and courage.]

unless you destroy them yourself, or discourage them to stay with you, by using them ill.

Temple.

DISCOU'RAGER. n. s. [from discourage.]

One that impresses diffidence and terror.

Most men in years, as they are generally discouragers of youth, are like old trees, which, being past bearing themselves, will suffer no young plants to flourish beneath them.

Pope.

DISCOU'RAGEMENT. n. s. [from discourage.]

1. The act of deterring, or depressing hope.

2. Determent; that which deters from any thing: with from.

Amongst other impediments of any inventions, it is none of the meanest discouragements, that they are so generally derided by common opinion.

Wilkins.

The books read at schools and colleges are full of incitements to virtue, and discouragements from vice.

Swift.

3. The cause of depression, or fear: with to, less properly.

To things we would have them learn, the great and only discouragement is, that they are called to them.

Locke.

DISCOURSE. n. s. [discours, French; discursus, Latin.]

1. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences.

By reason of that original weakness in the instruments, without which the understanding part is not able in this world by discourse to work, the very conceit of painfulness is a bridle to stay us.

Hooker.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,

Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason

To rust in us unus'd.

Shakespeare.

The act of the mind which connects propositions, and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it, if we name it reason.

Glanville.

2. Conversation; mutual intercourse of language; talk.

He waxeth wiser than himself, more by an hour's discourse than by a day's meditation.

Bacon.

In thy discourse, if thou desire to please,
All such is courteous, useful, new, or witty;
Usefulness comes by labour, wit by ease,
Courtesy grows in court, news in the city.

Herbert.

The vanquish'd party with the victors join'd,
Nor wanted sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind.

Dryden.

3. Effusion of language; speech.

Topical and superficial arguments, of which there is store to be found on both sides, filling the head with variety of thoughts, and the mouth with copious discourse, serve only to amuse the understanding and entertain company.

Locke.

4. A treatise; a dissertation either written or uttered.

The discourse here is about ideas, which, he says, are real things, and seen in God.

Locke.

Plutarch, in his discourse upon garrulity, commends the fidelity of the companions of Ulysses

Pope's Odyssey.

Quincy.

DISCREDIT. n. s. [décrediter, Fr.]

Ignominy; reproach; lower degree of infamy; disgrace; imputation of a fault.

Had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Shakespeare.

Idlers will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and then certify over their country to the discredit of a plantation.

Bacon.

That they may quit their morals without any discredit to their intellectuals, they fly to several stale, trite, pitiful objections and cavils.

South.

'Tis the duty of every christian to be concerned for the reputation or discredit his life may bring on his profession.

Rogers.

Alas! the small discredit of a bribe Scarce hurts the lawyer, but undoes the scribe.

Pope.

To DISCREDIT. v. a. [décrediter, Fr.]

1. To deprive of credibility; to make not trusted.

8

He had framed to himself many deceiving promises of life, which I have discredited to him, and now is he resolved to die. Shakspeare.

2. To disgrace; to bring reproach upon; to shame; to make less reputable or honourable.

You had left unseen a wonderful piece of work, which not to have been blest withal, would have discredited you. Shakspeare.

He is commended that makes a saving voyage, and least discredits his travels, who returns the same man he went. Watton.

He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

Reflect how glorious it would be to appear in countenance of discredited duty, and by example of piety revive the declining spirit of religion. Rogers.

Without care our best actions will lose much of their influence, and our virtues will be often discredited with the appearance of evil. Rogers.

3. To distrust; not to credit; not to hold certain.

DISCREET. adj. [discret, French.]

1. Prudent; circumspect; cautious; sober; not rash; not precipitant; not careless; not hardly adventurous.

Honest, discreet, quiet, and godly learned men, will not be with-drawn by you. Whitgift.

Less fearful than discreet,
You love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shak.

To elder years to be discreet and grave,
Then to old age maturity she gave. Denham.

It is the discreet man, not the witty, nor the learned, nor the brave, who guides the conversation, and gives measures to society. Addison's Spectator.

2. Modest; not forward. Not well authorized.

Dear youth, by fortune favour'd, but by love,
Alas! not favour'd less, be still as now
Discreet. Thomson.

- DISCREETLY. adv. [from discreet.] Prudently; cautiously; circumspectly.

Poets lose half the praise they should have got,
Could it be known what they discreetly blot. Waller.

The labour of obedience, loyalty, and subjection, is no more but for a man honestly and discreetly to sit still. South.

Profit springs from busks discreetly us'd. Phillips.

The dullest brain, if gently stirr'd,
Perhaps may waken to a humming bird;
The most recluse, discreetly open'd, find Congenial object in the cockle kind. Pope.

- DISCREETNESS. n. f. [from discreet.] The quality of being discreet; discretion.

- DISCREPANCE. n. f. [discrepancia, Latin.] Difference; contrariety; disagreement.

Diversity of education, and discrepancy of those principles wherewith men are at first imbued, and wherein all our after reasonings are founded. Lord Digby to K. Digby.

- DISCREPANT. adj. [discrepans, Latin.] Different; disagreeing; contrary.

- TO DISCRETE. v. a. [discretus, Lat.] To separate; to discontinue.

As for its diaphaneity, it enjoyeth that most eminently; as having its earthly and salinous parts so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not discreted by atomical terminations. Brown.

- DISCRETE. adj. [discretus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; disjointed; not continuous.
Discrete quantity, or different individuals, are measured by number, without any breaking continuity; that is, in things that have continuity, as continued quantity and motion. Hale.

2. Disjunctive: as, I resign my life, but not my honour, is a discrete proposition.

3. Discrete Proportion is when the ratio between two pairs of numbers or quantities is the same; but there is not the same proportion between all the four: thus, 6 : 8 :: 3 : 4. Harris.

DISCRETION. n. f. [from discretio, Lat.]

1. Prudence; knowledge to govern or direct one's self; skill; wise management.

Nothing then was further thought upon for the manner of governing; but all permitted unto their wisdom and discretion which were to rule. Hooker.

A knife may be taken away from a child, without depriving them of the benefits thereof which have years and discretion to use it. Hooker.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness: old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakspeare.

All this was order'd by the good discretion Of the right reverend cardinal of York. Shakspeare.

The pleasure of commanding our passions is to be preferred before any sensual pleasure; because it is the pleasure of wisdom and discretion. Tillotson.

But care in poetry must still be had,
It asks discretion ev'n in running mad. Pope.

There is no talent so useful towards rising in the world, or which puts men more out of the reach of fortune, than discretion, a species of lower prudence. Swift.

2. Liberty of acting at pleasure; uncontrolled and unconditional power: as, he surrenders at discretion; that is, without stipulation.

- DISCRETIONARY. adj. [from discretion.] Left at large; unlimited; unrestrained.

A deacon may have a dispensation for entering into orders before he is twenty-three years of age; and it is discretionary in the bishop to admit him to that order at what time he thinks fit. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The major being a person of consummate experience, was invested with a discretionary power. Tatler.

- DISCRE'TIVE. adj. [discretus, Latin.]

1. [In logick.] Discretive propositions are such wherein various, and seemingly opposite, judgments are made, whose variety or distinction is noted by the particles but, though, yet, &c. as, travellers may change their climate, but not their temper; Job was patient, though his grief was great. Watts.

2. [In grammar.] Discretive distinctions are such as imply opposition: as, not a man, but a beast.

- DISCRIMINABLE. adj. [from discriminare.] Distinguishable by outward marks or tokens. Diſt.

- TO DISCRIMINATE. v. a. [discrimino, Latin.]

1. To mark with notes of difference; to distinguish by certain tokens from another.

Oysters and cockles and muscles, which move not, have no discriminate sex. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

There are three sorts of it, differing in fineness from each other, and discriminated by the natives by three peculiar names. Boyle.

The right hand is discriminated from the left by a natural, necessary, and never to be confounded distinction. South.

Although the features of his countenance be no reason of obedience, yet they may serve to discriminate him from any other person, whom she is not to obey. Stillingfleet.

There may be ways of discriminating the voice; as by acuteness and gravity, the several degrees of rising and falling from one tone or note to another. Holder.

2. To select or separate from others.

You owe little less for what you are not, than for what you are, to that discriminating mercy, to which alone you owe your exemption from miseries. Boyle.

- DISCRIMINATENESS. n. f. [from discriminate.] Distinctness; marked difference. Diſt.

- DISCRIMINATION. n. f. [from discriminatio, Latin.]

1. The state of being distinguished from other persons or things.

There is a reverence to be shewed them on the account of their discrimination from other places, and separation for sacred uses. Stillingfleet.

2. The act of distinguishing one from another; distinction; difference put.

A satire should expose nothing but what is corrigible; and make a due discrimination between those that are, and those who are not, the proper objects of it. Addison's Spectator.

By that prudent discrimination made between the offenders of different degrees, he obliges those whom he has distinguished as objects of mercy. Addison's Freeholder.

3. The marks of distinction.

Take heed of abetting any factions, or applying any publick discriminations in matters of religion. King Charles.

Letters arise from the first original discriminations of voice, by way of articulation, whereby the ear is able to judge and observe the differences of vocal sounds. Holder.

- DISCRIMINATIVE. adj. [from discriminate.]

1. That makes the mark of distinction; characteristical.

The only standing test, and discriminative characteristick, of any metal or mineral, must be sought for in the constituent matter of it. Woodward.

2. That observes distinction.

Discriminative Providence knew before the nature and course of all things. More.

- DISCRIMINOUS. adj. [from discrimen, Latin.] Dangerous; hazardous. Not usual.

Any kind of spitting of blood imports a very discriminous state, unless it happens upon the gaping of a vein opened by a plethora. Harvey.

- DISCUBITORY. adj. [discubitorius, Lat.] Fitted to the posture of leaning.

After bathing they retired to bed, and refreshed themselves with a repast; and so that custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discubitory. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

- DISCUMBENCY. n. f. [discumbens, Lat.] The act of leaning at meat, after the ancient manner.

The Greeks and Romans used the custom of discumbency at meals, which was upon their left side; for so their right hand was free and ready for all service. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

- TO DISCUMBER. v. a. [dis and cumber.]

To disengage from any troublesome weight; to disengage from impediment.

His limbs discumber'd of the clinging vest,
He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope's Odyssey.

- TO DISCU'RE. v. a. [decouvrir, French.] To discover; to reveal.

A word perhaps peculiar to Spenser.

I will, if please you it discure, assay
To ease you of that ill. Fairy Queen.
DISCURSIVE. adj. [discursif, Fr. from discurro, Latin.]

1. Moving here and there; roving; desultory.

Some noises help sleep; as the blowing of the wind, and the trickling of water: they move a gentle attention; and whatsoever moveth attention, without too much labour, stilleth the natural and discursive motion of the spirits. Bacon.

2. Proceeding by regular gradation from premises to consequences; argumentative. This is sometimes, perhaps not improperly, written discursive.

There is a sanctity of soul and body, of more efficacy for the receiving of divine truths, than the greatest pretences to discursive demonstration.
More's Divine Dialogues.

There hath been much dispute touching the knowledge of brutes, whether they have a kind of discursive faculty, which some call reason.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCURSIVELY. adv. [from discursive.]
By due gradation of argument.

We have a principle within, whereby we think,
and we know we think; whereby we do discursively, and by way of ratiocination, deduce one thing from another. Hale.

DISCURSORY. adj. [discursor, Lat.] Argumental; rational.

DISCUS. n. f. [Latin.] A quoit; a heavy piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports.

From Elatreus' strong arm the discus flies,
And sings with unmatched force along the skies.
Pope.

TO DISCUSS. v. a. [discutio, discussum,
Latin.]

1. To examine; to ventilate; to clear by disquisition.

We are to discuss only those general exceptions which have been taken. Hooker.

His usage was to commit the discussing of causes privately to certain persons learned in the laws. Ayliffe's Parergon.

This knotty point should you and I discuss,
Or tell a tale? Pope.

2. To disperse: commonly applied to a humour or swelling.

Many arts were used to discuss the beginnings of new affection. Wotton.

3. To break to pieces.

Consider the threefold effect of Jupiter's trisulk, to burn, discuss, and terebrate. Brown.

DISCUSSER. n. f. [from discuss.] He that discusses; an examiner.

DISCUSSION. n. f. [from discuss.]

1. Disquisition; examination; ventilation of a question.

Truth cannot be found without some labour and intention of the mind, and the thoughts dwelling a considerable time upon the survey and discussion of each particular. South.

Various discussions tear our heated brain:
Opinions often turn; still doubts remain;
And who indulges thought, increases pain.
Prior.

2. [In surgery.] Discussion or resolution is nothing else but breathing out the humours by insensible transpiration.
Wiseman.

DISCUSSIVE. adj. [from discuss.] Having the power to discuss or disperse any noxious matter.

DISCUTIENT. n. f. [discutiens, Latin.]
A medicine that has power to repel or drive back the matter of tumours in the blood. It sometimes means the same as carminative. Quincy.

The swellings arising from these require to be treated, in their beginning, with moderate re-pellents and discutients. Wiseman.

TO DISDAIN. v. a. [dédaigner, Fr.]

To scorn; to consider as unworthy of one's character.

There is nothing so great, which I will fear to do for you; nor nothing so small, which I will disdain to do for you. Sidney.

They do disdain as much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath. Shakspeare.

What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn.
Shakspeare.

Tell him, Cato

Disdains a life which he has power to offer.
Addison.

DISDAIN. n. f. [sdegno, Ital.] Contempt; scorn; contemptuous anger; indignation.

Children being haughty, through disdain and want of nurture, do stain the nobility of their kindred. Ecclus.

But against you, ye Greeks, ye coward train,
Gods! how my soul is mov'd with just disdain!
Pope's Odyssey.

DISDAINFUL. adj. [disdain and full.] Contemptuous; haughtily scornful;
indignant.

There will come a time when three words, uttered with charity and meekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward, than three thousand volumes, written with disdainful sharpness of wit. Hooker.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it,
Disdainful to be tried by 't. Shakspeare.

Seek through this grove;
A sweet Athenian lady is in love
With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes;
But do it when the next thing he espies
Shall be the lady. Shakspeare.

But those I can accuse, I can forgive:
By my disdainful silence let them live. Dryden.
The disdainful soul came rushing through the wound. Dryden.

DISDAINFULLY. adv. [from disdainful.] Contemptuously; with haughty scorn;
with indignation.

Either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more.
Shakspeare.

It is not to insult and domineer, to look disdainfully, and revile imperiously, that procures esteem from any one. South.

DISDAINFULNESS. n. f. [from disdain-ful.] Contempt; contemptuousness;
haughty scorn.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her.
Sidney.

A proud disdainfulness of other men. Afcham.

DISEASE. n. f. [dis and ease.] Distemper; malady; sickness; morbid
state.

What's the disease he means?
—'Tis call'd the evil. Shakspeare.

And Asa, in the thirty and ninth year of his reign, was diseased in his feet, and his disease was exceeding great; and in his disease he fought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. Chron.

It is idle to propose remedies before we are assured of the disease, or to be in pain till we are convinced of the danger. Swift.

Intemperance
In meats and drinks, which in the earth shall bring
Diseases dire. Milton.

Then wasteful forth
Walks the dire pow'r of pestilent disease.
Thomson's Summer.

TO DISEASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To afflict with disease; to torment with pain or sickness; to make morbid;
to infect.

We are all diseased,
And with our surfeiting and wanton hours
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever.
Shakspeare.

Flatt'ers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft,
Hug their diseas'd perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shakspeare.

Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth. Shakspeare.

He was diseased in his feet. 1 Kings.

A lazaret-house it seem'd, wherein were laid Numbers of all diseas'd, all maladies
Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture. Milton.

2. To put to pain; to pain; to make uneasy.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not at all disease them. Locke.

DISEASEDNESS. n. f. [from diseased.] Sickness; morbidness; the state of being diseased.

This is a restoration to some former state; not that state of indigency and diseasedness. Burnet.

DISEDGED. adj. [dis and edge.] Blunted;
obtunded; dulled.

I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her Whom now thou tir'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Shakspeare.

TO DISEMBARK. v. a. [dis and embark.]
To carry to land.

I must unto the road, to disembark
Some necessaries. Shakspeare.

TO DISEMBARK. v. n. To land; to go on land.

There disembarking on the green sea-side,
We land our cattle, and the spoil divide. Pope.

TO DISEMBITTER. v. a. [dis and embitter.] To sweeten; to free from bitterness; to clear from acrimony:
an unusual word.

Encourage such innocent amusements as may disembitter the minds of men, and make them mutually rejoice in the same agreeable satisfactions. Addison's Freeholder.

DISEMBO'DIED. adj. [dis and embodied.]
Divested of the body.

TO DISEMBO'GUE. v. a. [disemboucher, old French. Skinner.] To pour out at the mouth of a river; to vent.

Rivers

In ample oceans disembogu'd, or lost. Dryden.

Rolling down, the steep Timavus raves,
And through nine channels disembogues his waves.
Addison.

TO DISEMBO'GUE. v. n. To gain a vent;
to flow.

By eminences placed up and down the globe,
the rivers make innumerable turnings and windings, and at last disembogue in several mouths into the sea. Cheyne.

DISEMBO'WELLED. participial adj. [dis and embowel.] Taken from out the bowels.

So her disembowell'd web
Arachne in a hall or kitchen spreads,
Obvious to vagrant flies. Philips.

TO DISEMBRO'IL. v. a. [debouiller, Fr.]
To disentangle; to free from perplexity;
to reduce from confusion.

Then earth from air, and seas from earth were driv'n,
And grosser air sunk from ethereal heav'n;
Thus disembroil'd, they take their proper place.
Dryden.

The system of his politicks is disembreit, and cleared of all those incoherences and independent matters that are woven into this motley piece.
Addison.

To DISENABLE. v. a. [dis and enable.]
To deprive of power; to disable; to sink into weakness; to weaken.

Now age has overtaken me; and want, a more insufferable evil, through the change of the times, has wholly disenabled me. Dryden.

To DISENCHANT. v. a. [dis and enchant.]
To free from the force of an enchantment; to deliver from the power of charms or spells.

Alas! let your own brain disenchant you.
Sidney.

Muse, stoop thy disenchanted wing to truth.
Denham.

Haste to thy work; a noble stroke or two Ends all the charms, and disenchants the grove.
Dryden.

To DISENCUMBER. v. a. [dis and en-cumber.]

1. To discharge from encumbrances; to free from clogs and impediments; to disburden; to exonerate.

It will need the actual intention, the particular stress and application of the whole soul, to disencumber and set it free, to scour off its rust, and remove those hindrances which would otherwise clog and check the freedom of its operations.
Spratt.

The disencumber'd soul
Flew off, and left behind the clouds and starry pole.
Dryden.

Dreams look like the amusements of the soul, when she is disencumber'd of her machine; her sports and recreations, when she has laid her charge asleep.
Spectator.

2. To free from obstruction of any kind.
Dim night had disencumber'd heav'n. Milton.
The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disen- cumbered building in the inside, that I have ever seen.
Addison on Italy.

DISENCUMBRANCE. n. f. [from the verb.] Freedom from encumbrance and obstruction.

There are many who make a figure below what their fortune or merit entitles them to, out of mere choice, and an elegant desire of ease and disencumbrance.
Spectator.

To DISENGAGE. v. a. [dis and engage.]
1. To separate from any thing with which it is in union.

Some others, being very light, would float up and down a good while, before they could wholly disengage themselves and descend.
Burnet's Theory.

2. To disentangle; to clear from impediments or difficulties.
From civil broils he did us disengage;
Found nobler objects for our martial rage.
Waller.

In the next paragraph, I found my author pretty well disengaged from quotations. Atterbury.

3. To withdraw, applied to the affection;
to wean; to abstract the mind.

It is requisite that we should acquaint ourselves with God, that we should frequently disen- gage our hearts from earthly pursuits. Atterbury.

The consideration that should disengage our fondness from worldly things, is, that they are uncertain in their foundation; fading, transient, and corruptible in their nature.
Rogers.

4. To free from any powerful detention.

When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free;
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see.
Denham.

5. To release from an obligation.

To DISENGAGE. v. n. To set one's self free from; to withdraw one's affections from.

Providence gives us notice, by sensible declen-sions, that we may disengage from the world by degrees.
Collier on Thought.

DISENGAGED. participial adj. [from dis-engage.]

1. Disjoined; disentangled.

2. Vacant; at leisure; not fixed down to any particular object of attention.

3. Released from obligation.

DISENGAGEDNESS. n. f. [from disengage.]
The quality of being disengaged; vacuity of attention; freedom from any pressing business; disjunction.

DISENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from disengage.]

1. Release from any engagement, or obligation.

2. Freedom of attention; vacancy.

To DISENTANGLE. v. a. [dis and entangle.]

1. To unfold or loose the parts of any thing interwoven with one another.

Though in concretions particles so entangle one another, that they cannot in a short time clear themselves, yet they do incessantly strive to disentangle themselves, and get away. Boyle.

2. To set free from impediments; to dis- embroil; to clear from perplexity or difficulty.

Till they could find some expedient to expli-cate and disentangle themselves out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards supplying their armies.
Clarendon.

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgment than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to disentangle them from a temptation.
South.

3. To disengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures.
Stillingfleet.

To DISENTERRE. v. a. [dis, and enterre, French.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to disenterre the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul.
Brown.

To DISENTHRAL. v. a. [dis and enthrall.]
To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall disenthral;
For I upon his name will call.
Sandys.

If religion were false, bad men would set the utmost force of their reason on work to discover that falsity, and thereby disenthral themselves.
South.

To DISENTHRONE. v. a. [dis and en-throne.] To depose from sovereignty;
to dethrone.

Either to disenthrone the king of heav'n
We war, if war be best; or to regain
Our own right lost.
Milton.

To DISENTRANCE. v. a. [dis and entrance.] To awaken from a trance, or deep sleep.

Ralpho, by this time disentranc'd,
Upon his bum himself advanc'd.
Hudibras.

To DISESPOUSE. v. a. [dis and espouse.]
To separate after faith plighted.

Such was the rage
Of Turnus, for Lavinia disespous'd.
Milton.

DISESTEEM. n. f. [dis and esteem.] Slight regard; a disregard more moderate than contempt.

When any one, by miscarriage, falls into dis- esteem, he will fall under neglect and contempt.
Locke.

To DISESTEEM. v. a. [from the noun.]
To regard slightly; to consider with a slight degree of contempt.

Should Mars see 't,
That horrid hurrier of men, or she that betters
him,
Minerva, never so incens'd, they could not dis- esteem.
Chapman.

But if this sacred gift you disesteem,
Then cruel plagues shall fall on Priam's state.
Denham.

I would not be thought to disesteem or dissuade
the study of nature.
Locke.

DISESTIMATION. n. f. [dis, and estimation, Lat.] Disrespect; disesteem. DiA.

DISFAVOUR. n. f. [dis and favour.]

1. Discountenance; unpropitious regard; unfavourable aspect; unfavourable circumstance.

2. A state of ungraciousness or unacceptability; a state in which one is not favoured.

While free from sacrilege, he was at peace, as it were, with God and man; but after his sacrilege he was in disfavour with both. Spelman.

3. Want of beauty. DiA.

To DISFAVOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
To discountenance; to withhold or withdraw kindness.

Might not those of higher rank, and nearer access to her majesty, receive her own commands, and be countenanced or disfavoured according as they obey?
Swift.

DISFAVOURER. n. f. [from disfavour.]
Discountancer; not a favourer.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavourers of that voyage, the enterprize had succeeded.
Bacon.

DISFIGURATION. n. f. [from disfigure.]

1. The act of disfiguring.

2. The state of being disfigured.

3. Deformity.

To DISFIGURE. v. a. [dis and figure.]
To change any thing to a worse form;
to deform; to mangle.

You are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it. Shakspeare.

In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured. Shaksp.

Abject is their punishment,
Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,
Or, if his likeness, by themselves defac'd. Milt.

Uriel, on the Assyrian mount,
Saw him disfigur'd more than could befall Spirit of happy sort. Milton.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have confisted, as well as the rest of his figure, with such a soul and such parts as made him, disfigured
as he was, capable to be a dignitary in the church.
Locke.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison's Cato.

His long absence, and travels which had dis-
figured him, made him altogether unknown.
Brown on Epic Poetry.

DISFIGUREMENT. n. f. [from disfigure.]
Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The disfigurement that travel or sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the isle.
Suckling.

And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement.

Milton.

To DISFO'REST. v. a. [dis and forest.]
To reduce land from the privileges of a forest to the state of common land.

DISFRA'NCHISEMENT. n. f. [from disfranchise.]
The act of depriving of privileges.

Diſ.

To DISFURNISH. v. a. [dis and furnish.]
To deprive; to unfurnish; to strip.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfurnish me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.

Shakspeare.

He durst not disfurnish that country either of so great a commander, or of the wonted garrisons.

Knolles' History.

To DISGARNISH. v. a. [dis and garnish.]

1. To strip of ornaments.

Diſ.

2. To take guns from a fortress.

To DISGLO'RIFY. v. a. [dis and glorify.]

To deprive of glory; to treat with indignity.

So Dagon shall be magnified, and God,
Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,
Disglorified, blasphem'd, and had in scorn.

Milton.

To DISGORGE. v. a. [degorgere, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard?
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up.

Shakspeare.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,
To see his heaving breast disgorge the briny draught.

Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.

All th' embossed fores and headed evils,
That thou with licence of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world?

Shakspeare.

The deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their warlike freightage.

Shakspeare.

They move along the banks
Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams.

Milton.

Countries much annoyed with earthquakes, have volcanoes; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorge that fire which was the cause of the disaster.

Derham.

DISGRA'CE. n. f. [disgrace, Fr.]

1. State of being out of favour.

2. State of ignominy; dishonour; state of shame.

Like a dull actor, now
I have forgot my part, and I am out
Even to a full disgrace.

Shakspeare.

Poetry, howsoever censured, is not fallen from the highest stage of honour to the lowest stair of disgrace.

Peacham.

3. Act of unkindness. Obsolete.

To such bondage he was for so many courses, tied by her, whose disgraces to him were graced by her excellence.

Sidney.

4. Cause of shame.

And is it not a foul disgrace,
To lose the boltspit of thy face?

Baynard.

And he whose affluence disdain'd a place,
Brib'd by a title, makes it a disgrace.

Brown.

To DISGRA'CE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to dishonour, as an agent.

We may not so in any one special kind admire her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored.

Hooker.

Men's passions will carry them far in misrepresenting an opinion which they have a mind to disgrace.

Burnet.

2. To bring to shame, as a cause: as, his ignorance disgraced him.

3. To put out of favour: as, the minister was disgraced.

DISGRA'CEFUL. adj. [disgrace and full.] Shameful; ignominious; reproachful;
procuring shame.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy; not with upbraiding and disgraceful language, but with such only as may express and reprove the fault, and amend the person.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To retire behind their chariots, was as little disgraceful then, as it is now to alight from one's horse in a battle.

Pope.

DISGRA'CEFULLY. adv. [from disgraceful.]
In disgrace; with indignity; ignominiously.

The senate have cast you forth
Disgracefully, to be the common tale
Of the whole city.

Ben Jonson.

DISGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. [from disgraceful.]
Ignominy.

DISGRA'CE. n. f. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes
ignominy.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling.

Swift.

DISGRA'CIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.]
Unpleasing.

I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye.

Shakspeare.

To DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.

How might we disguise him?

—Alas! I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.

Shakspeare.

Disguis'd he came; but those his children
dear

Their parent soon discern'd through his disguise.

Milton.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false show: as, he dis-
guis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.

They saw the faces, which too well they knew,

Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er

With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore.

Dryden.

More duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.

Milton.

Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view.

Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.

I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a sneaker of five gallons; the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the slip.

Spectator.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others.

Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
But never penetrate through this disguise.

Dryden.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, surmises,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises.

Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.

You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost

Antickt us.

Shakspeare.

DISGUISEMENT. n. f. [from disguise.]

Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart.

Sidney.

The marquis thought best to dismask his beard, and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet: this did somewhat handsomely heal the disguisement.

Wotton.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.

I hope he is grown more disengaged from his intentness on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous dis- guiser.

Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser.

Shakspeare.

DISGUST. n. f. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.

2. Ill humour; malevolence; offence conceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received.

Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence.

Thomson.

To DISGUST. v. a. [degouter, French;
degusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.

If a man were disgusted at marriage, he would never recommend it to his friend.

Atterbury.

Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered.

Watts.

3. To produce aversion: with from.

What disgusts me from having to do with answer jobbers, is, that they have no conscience.

Swift.

DISGUSTFUL. adj. [disgust and full.]
Nauseous; that causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook.

Swift.

DISH. n. f. [disc, Saxon; dysc, Erse;
discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish.

Dryden.

I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid.

Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.

Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish;

Milton.

Or do his grey hairs any violence?
A ladle for our silver dish

Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship.

Shakspeare.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,

Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds.

Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' th' court; it is no contract, none.

Shakspeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish

More than a another, that a pheasant is. Suckling.

The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of.

Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tinnors.

They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon.

Carew.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,

I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd

For me to try. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. n. f. [dish and clout.] The cloth with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's he wears next his heart for a favour. Shakspeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Send them up to their masters with a dishclout pinned at their tails.

Swift.

DISH-WASHER. n. f. [dish and washer;
mergus.] The name of a bird.

DISHABILLE. adj. [deshabillé, Fr.]
Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabille.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHABILLE. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille. Clarissa.

To DISHA'BIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakspeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide havock made.

King Lear.

DISHA'RMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.]
Contrariety to harmony.

To DISHEA'RTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.]
To discourage; to deject; to terrify;
to depress.

To dishearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with christian charity.

Hooker.

Be not disheartened then, nor cloud those looks
That wont to be more chearful and serene.

Milton.

Yet neither thus dishearten'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited.

Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends.

Stillington.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it.

Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends or even the fears of our disheartened enemies.

Atterbury.

DISHERISON. n. f. [dis and herison.]
The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.]
To cut off from hereditary succession;
to debar from an inheritance.

He tries to restore to their rightful heritage
VOL. I.

such good old English words as have been long time out of use, almost disherited.

Spenser.

Nor how the Dryads and the woodland train
Disherited, ran howling o'er the plain.

Dryden.

To DISHE'VEL. v. a. [decheveler, French.]

To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishevelled, Wringing her hands, and making piteous moan.

Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishevelled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country.

Knolles.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishevel'd hair.

Dryden's Æneid.

The flames, involv'd in smoke,
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevel'd hair and rich attire.

Dryden's Æneid.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her dishevel'd hair.

Smith.

DISHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave:
a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheels, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felles more outwards.

Mortimer.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an utile or ju-cundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence.

South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right and wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature.

Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow will we be married.—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Shakspeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with lopp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her sacred domes involv'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars.

Pope.

DISHONESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faith-lessly; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Tho' most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Shakspeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wife daughter should bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness.

Ecclesiasticus.

DISHONESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty must be to their disadvantage.

Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?—Heaven be my witness you do,
if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Shakspeare.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

He was pleased to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend.

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;

'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace

On one descended from a royal race.

Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm doing.

Shakspeare.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blast with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.

Shakspeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune.

Shakspeare.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judg'd wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.

Ecclesiasticus.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.

Dryden's Iliad.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find

Those articles which did our state decrease.

Daniel.

2. Being in a state of neglect or dis-esteem.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty?

Ecclesiasticus.

DISHONOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be, to ensnare an irreligious

Dishonourer of Dagon.

Milton.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHORN. v. a. [dis and horn.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor.

Shakspeare.

DISHUMOUR. n. f. [dis and humour.]

Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal.

Spektor.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and improvement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and disimprovement of the earth.

Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real disimprovements.

Swift.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill-will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Arbuthnot and Pope.

TO DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; vitiously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age of idleness, who all our powers engage in the same studies, the same course to hold, Nor think our reason for new arts too old. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stillington.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and misbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtilty; unfairness; low craft.

I might press them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness, of embracing a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue.

DISINHERISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.] 1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged, in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinherison. Clarendon.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinherisons or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

TO DISINHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon,

Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud, And disinherit chaos that reigns here In double night of darkness, and of slander. Milt.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony, That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able To waste it all myself, and leave ye none; So disinherited, how would ye bless Me, now your curse! Milton.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication! South.

TO DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wife, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addison.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [dis and interesse, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.] Void of regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here, When general, old, disinterests'd, and clear. Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis, and interessement, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the charges of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinterestment. Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome. Glanville.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superiour to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself. Swift.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

TO DISINTRICATE. v. a. [dis and intricate.] To disentangle. Dict.

TO DISINVI'ITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Dict.

TO DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton.

Left different degree Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd Together we had liv'd; ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoined her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

TO DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound, And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,

But mangle and disjoint the brittle frame? More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement. Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate.

Rotation must disperse in air

All things which on the rapid orb appear; And if no power that motion should controul, It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackm.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Sidney.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

TO DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakspeare.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fontinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Thinks by our late dear brother's death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shaks.

DISJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; determination: perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the disjudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Latin.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.] 1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Grew.

2. That marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. In logic.

A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts, therefore only the last of these examples is true: but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high, Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk

Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas varied with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

DISKINDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them took, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth, gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estr.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislikes. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Addison.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement.

This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose
That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Fairfax.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection;
to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What most he should dislike seems pleasant to
him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign. Not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.]

To make unlike. Unusual.

Masse your face,

Dis mantle you; and, as you can, dislike
The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare.

DISLIKENESS. n. f. [dis and likeness.]
Dissimilitude; not resemblance; un-likeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it;
and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKER. n. f. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

TO DISLIMB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. L'E.

TO DISLIMN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakespeare.

TO DISLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus,
Latin.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

After some time the strata on all sides of the globe were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodward.

2. To put out of joint; to disjoint.

Were 't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISLOCATION. n. f. [from dislocate.]

1. The act of shifting the places of things.

2. The state of being displaced.

The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate, shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.

3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket, or correspondent part; a joint put out.

It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew.

TO DISLODGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]

1. To remove from a place.

The shell-fish which are resident in the depths live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores; which the littorales usually are. Woodward.

2. To remove from a habitation.

These senses lost, behold a new defeat,
The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.

My sword can perfect what it has begun,
And from your walls dislodge that haughty son. Dryden.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.

The ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone. Shakespeare.

TO DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,
Friendliest to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge. Milton.

DISLOYAL. adj. [desloyal, French; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach
Disloyal; on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience. Milton.

2. Dishonest; perfidious.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They're cold delations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Not true to the marriage-bed.

The lady is disloyal.

—Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakespeare.

Disloyal town!

Speak, didst not thou
For sake thy faith, and break thy nuptial vow? Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The last three senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. f. [from disloyal.]

1. Want of fidelity to the sovereign.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to judgment, not in the disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, and disloyalty.
King Charles.

2. Want of fidelity in love. Obsolete.

There shall appear such seeming truths of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance. Shakespeare.

DISMAL. adj. [dies malus, Latin, an evil day.] Sorrowful; dire; horrid; melancholy; uncomfortable; unhappy;
dark.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict. Shakespeare.

He hears

On all sides from innumerable tongues
A dismal universal hiss. Milton.

Nor yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb Fearless, unfeared he slept. Milton.

The dismal situation waste and wild
A dungeon horrible! Milton.

Such a variety of dismal accidents must have broken the spirits of any man. Clarendon.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other view the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

Dreadful gleams,

Dismal screams. Pope.

DISMALLY. adv. [from dismal.] Horribly; sorrowfully; uncomfortably.

DISMALNESS. n. f. [from dismal.] Horrour; sorrow.

TO DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To deprive of a dress; to strip; to denude.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and beats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garbisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation. South.

2. To loose; to throw off a dress; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Dearest and best, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Shakespeare.

3. To strip a town of its outworks.

It is not sufficient to possess our own fort without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies. Hakewill.

4. To break down any thing external.

His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;
His nose dismantled in his mouth is found;
His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound. Dryden.

TO DISMASK. v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown,
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn. Shakspeare.
The marquis thought best to dismask his beard;
and told him that he was going covertly.
Wotton.

To DISMAY. v. a. [desmayar, Spanish.]
To terrify; to discourage; to affright;
to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismay'd.
Spenser.

Enemies would not be so troublesome to the western coasts, nor that country itself would be so often dismayed with alarms as they have of late years been. Raleigh's Essays.

He will not fail thee; fear not, neither be dif-
mayed. Deut.

Nothing can make him remiss in the practice of his duty; no prospect of interest can allure him, no fear of danger dismay him. Atterbury.

DISMAY. n. f. [desmayo, Spanish.] Fall of courage; terror felt; desertion of mind; fear impressed.

All fate mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In other's countenance read his own dismay.
Milton.

This then, not minded in dismay, yet now
Assures me that the bitterness of death Is past. Milton.

DISMAYEDNESS. n. f. [from dismay.] Dejection of courage; dispiritedness.

The valiantest feels inward dismayedness, and yet the fearfullest is ashamed fully to shew it.
Sidney.

DISME. n. f. [French.] A tenth; the tenth part; tithe.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dismes
Hath been as dear as Helen. Shakspeare.

The pope began to exercise his new rapines by a compliance with king Edward, in granting him two years disme from the clergy. Ayliffe.

To DISMEMBER. v. a. [dis and member.]
To divide member from member; to dilacerate; to cut in pieces.

I am with both, each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl afunder, and dismember me. Shak.

O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! but, alas!
Cæsar must bleed for it. Shakspeare.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering, like a vulture, to devour or dismember its dying carcass. Swift.

Fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him on the naked plains.
Pope's Odyssey.

Those who contemplate only the fragments or pieces of science dispersed in short unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth, but must always view it as deformed and dismembered. Watts.

To DISMISS. v. a. [dimissus, Latin.]

1. To send away.

We commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him. Shaksp.
He dismissed the assembly. Acts.

2. To give leave of departure.

If our young Iulus be no more,
Dismiss our navy from your friendly shore.
Dryden.

3. To discard; to divest of an office.

DISMISSION. n. f. [from dimissio, Lat.]

1. Dispatch; act of sending away.

So pass'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dismission from the sky. Dryden.

2. An honourable discharge from any office or place.

Not only thou degrad'st them, or remit'st
To life obscure, which were a fair dismission;
But throw'st them lower than thou didst exalt them high. Milton's Agonistes.

3. Deprivation; obligation to leave any post or place.

You must not stay here longer; your dismission
Is come from Cæsar. Shakspeare.

To DISMORTGAGE. v. a. [dis and mort- gage.] To redeem from mortgage.

He dismortgaged the crown demesnes, and left behind a mass of gold. Howel's Vocal Forest.

To DISMOUNT. v. a. [demonter, French.]

1. To throw off a horse.

From this flying steed unrein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,
Dismounted, on th' Aëlian field I fall. Milton.

2. To throw from any elevation or place of honour.

3. To throw a cannon from its carriage.
The Turks artillery, planted against that tower, was by the christian cannoneers dismounted with shot from the tower, and many of the gunners slain. Knolles.

To DISMOUNT. v. n.

1. To alight from a horse.

When he came within sight of that prodigious army at Agincourt, he ordered all his cavalry to dismount, and implore upon their knees a blessing.
Addison's Freeholder.

2. To descend from any elevation.

To DISNATURALIZE. v. a. [dis and na- turalize.] To alienate; to make alien;
to deprive of the privileges of birth.

DISNATURED. adj. [dis and nature.]
Unnatural; wanting natural tenderness; devoid of natural affection. Unusual.

If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. n. f. [dis and obedience.]

1. Violation of lawful command or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiors.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shaksp.
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse.
Milton.

Murder, adultery, or disobedience, to parents, have a general notion antecedently to laws.

This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers.

2. Incompliance.

If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway?
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?
This disobedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move.
Blackmore.

DISOBEDIENT. adj. [dis and obedient.]
Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands, or prohibition.

The man of God was disobedient unto the word of the Lord. 1 Kings.

To DISOBEY. v. a. [dis and obey.] To break commands, or transgress prohibitions.

She absolutely bade him; and he durst not know how to disobey. Sidney.

He's loth to disobey the god's command,
Nor willing to forsake this pleasant land.

Denham.

DISOBLIGATION. n. f. [dis and obliga- tion.] Offence; cause of disgust.

If he receded from what he had promised, it would be such a disobligation to the prince that he would never forget it. Clarendon.

There can be no malice, and consequently no crime or disobligation. L'Estrange.

To DISOBLIGE. v. a. [dis and oblige.]
To offend; to disgust; to give offence to. A term by which offence is tenderly expressed.

Ashley had been removed from that charge, and was thereby so much disobliged, that he quitted
the king's party. Clarendon.

Those, though in highest place, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none when they shall most need them. South.

It is in the power of more particular persons in this kingdom, than in any other, to distress
the government, when they are disobliged.

My plan has given offence to some gentlemen, whom it would not be very safe to disoblige.

We love and esteem our clergy, and are apt to lay some weight upon their opinion, and would not willingly disoblige them. Swift.

If a woman suffers her lover to see she is loth to disoblige him, let her beware of an encroacher.
Clarissa.

DISOBLIGING. participial adj. [from dis- oblige.] Disgusting; unpleasing; offensive.

Peremptoriness can best no form of understanding: it renders wise men disobliging and troublesome, and fools ridiculous and contemptible. Government of the Tongue.

DISOBLIGINGLY. adv. [from disoblig- ing.] In a disgusting or offensive manner; without attention to please.

4. Establishment in a new state; dismissal into new hands.

I am called off from public dissertations by a domestick affair of great importance, which is no less than the disposal of my sister Jenny for life. Tatler.

To DISPOSE. v. a. [disposer, Fr. dispono, Lat.]

1. To employ to various purposes; to diffuse.

Thus, whilst she did her various pow'r dispose, The world was free from tyrants, wars, and woes. Prior.

2. To give; to place; to bestow.

Yet ice, when noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakspeare.

Of what you gathered, as most your own, you have disposed much in works of public piety. Spratt.

3. To turn to any particular end or consequence.

Endure and conquer; Jove will soon dispose
To future good our past and present woes. Dryden.

4. To adapt; to form for any purpose.

These when the knights beheld, they 'gan dispose Themselves to court, and each a damsel chose. Spenser.

But if thee list unto the court to throng,
And there to haunt after the hoped prey,
Then must thou thee dispose another way. Hubberd's Tale.

5. To frame the mind; to give a propensity; to incline: with to.

Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, husbands to jealousy, and wise men to irresolution and melancholy. Bacon.

The memory of what they had suffered, by being without it, easily disposed them to do this. Clarendon.

He knew the seat of Paradise;
And, as he was dispos'd, could prove it
Below the moon, or else above it. Hudibras.

This disposes men to believe what it teaches,
to follow what it advises. Temple.

A man might do this now if he were maliciously disposed, and had a mind to bring matters to extremity. Dryden.

Although the frequency of prayer and fasting may be of no efficacy to dispose God to be more gracious, yet it is of great use to dispose us to be more objects of his grace. Smalridge.

If mere moralists find themselves disposed to pride, lust, intemperance, or avarice, they do not think their morality concerned to check them. Swift.

6. To make fit: with for.

This may dispose me, perhaps, for the reception of truth; but helps me not to it. Locke.

The magistrate is both the beggar, and the disposer
of what is got by begging. Graunt.

2. Governour; regulator; director.

I think myself obliged, whatever my private apprehensions may be of the success, to do my duty, and leave events to their disposer. Boyle.

All the reason of mankind cannot suggest any solid ground of satisfaction, but in making that God our friend, who is the absolute disposer of all things. South.

Would I had been disposer of thy stars, Thou shouldst have had thy wish, and died in wars. Dryden.

3. One who takes from, and gives to, whom he pleases.

But brandish'd high, in an ill omen'd hour,
To thee, proud Gaul, behold thy justest fear,
The master sword, disposer of thy pow'r. Prior.

DISPOSITION. n. f. [from dispositio, Lat.]

1. Order; method; distribution.

Touching musical harmony, whether by instrument or voice, it being of high and low, in due proportionable disposition, such notwithstanding is the force thereof, and so very pleasing effects it hath, in that very part of man which is most divine, that some have been thereby induced to think, that the soul itself by nature is,
or hath in it, harmony. Hooker.

Under this head of invention is placed the disposition of the work, to put all things in a beautiful order and harmony, that the whole may be of a piece. Dryden's Dufresney.

I ask whether the connection of the extremes be not more clearly seen, in this simple and natural disposition, than in the perplexed repetitions and jumble of five or six syllogisms? Locke.

2. Natural fitness; quality.

Refrangibility of the rays of light is their disposition to be refracted, or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

3. Tendency to any act or state.

This argueth a great disposition to putrefaction in the soil and air. Bacon.

Disposition is when the power and ability of doing any thing is forward, and ready upon every occasion to break into action. Locke.

Bleeding is to be used or omitted according to the symptoms which affect the brain: it relieves in any inflammatory disposition of the coat of the nerve. Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. Temper of mind.

I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villanous inconstancy of man's disposition is able to bear. Shakspeare.

Lesser had been
The thwartings of your disposition, if
You had not shew'd them how you were dispos'd,
Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Shakspeare.

5. Affection of kindness or ill will.

I take myself to be as well informed as most men in the dispositions of each people towards the other. Swift.

6. Predominant inclination.

As they pinch one another by the disposition,
he cries out, no more. Shakspeare.

The love we bear to our friends is generally caused by our finding the same disposition in them which we feel in ourselves. Pope.

7. Assortment; adjustment of external circumstances: not used.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare's Othello.

DISPOSITIVE. adj. [from dispose.] That implies disposal of any property; decretive.

The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences wherein dispositive and enacting terms are made use of.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

DISPOSITIVELY. adv. [from dispositive.]

1. In a dispositive manner.

2. Respecting individuals; distributively.

That axiom in philosophy, that the generation of one thing is the corruption of another, although it be substantially true, concerning the form and matter, is also dispositively verified in the efficient or producer. Brown's Vulg. Err.

DISPOSITOR. n. f. [from dispose.] The lord of that sign in which the planet is, and by which therefore it is overruled.

To DISPOSSESS. v. a. [dis and possess.]

1. To put out of possession; to deprive; to dispossess.

The blow from saddle forced him to fly;
Else might it needs down to his manly breast Have cleft his head in twain, and life thence dispossess. Fairy Queen.

Thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossest the soul of thy grandame. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Let us sit upon the ground, and tell
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they dispossest. Shakspeare's Richard II.

I will chuse
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossest her all. Shakspeare's Timon.

In thee I hope; thy succours I invoke,
To win the crown whence I am dispossess'd;
For like renown awaiteth on the stroke,
To cast the haughty down, or raise th' oppress'd.
Fairfax.

The children went to Gilead, and took it,
and dispossessed the Amorite which was in it.
Numbers.

This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deity supreme, us dispossess'd,
He trusted to have seiz'd.
Milton.

Restless Amata lay
Fir'd with disdain for Turnus dispossest,
And the new nuptials of the Trojan guest.
Dryden's Aeneid.

2. It is generally used with of before the thing taken away.

Charles resolv'd, with a puissant army, to pass over, and to dispossess the pirate of Tunis.
Knolles' History.

No pow'r shall dispossess
My thoughts of that expected happiness.
Denham.

O fairest of all creatures, last and best
Of what heav'n made, how art thou dispossess'd
Of all thy native glories!
Dryden.

Nothing can create more trouble to a man than to endeavour to dispossess him of this conceit.
Tillotson.

3. Formerly with from.

They arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over their brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth.
Milton.

It will be found a work of no small difficulty to dispossess and throw out a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead prescription.
South.

DISPOSURE. n. f. [from dispose.]

1. Disposal; government; power; management.

In his disposure is the orb of earth,
The throne of kings, and all of human birth.
Sandys.

They quietly surrendered both it and themselves to his disposure.
Sandys' Journey.

Whilst they murmur against the present disposure of things, they do tacitly desire in them a diformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. State; posture.

They remained in a kind of warlike disposure,
or perhaps little better.
Wotton.

DISPRAISE. n. f. [dis and praise.] Blame; censure; dishonour.

If I can do it
By aught that I can speak in his dispraise,
She shall not long continue love to him.
Shaksp.

To me reproach
Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise.
Milton.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breasts; no weakness; no contempt,
Dispraise, or blame.
Milton's Agonistes.

I need not raise
Trophies to thee from other men's dispraise.
Denham.

Looks fright not men: the general has seen
Moors
With as bad faces; no dispraise to Bertran's.
Dryden.

If any writer shall do this paper so much honour as to inscribe the title of it to others, the whole praise or dispraise of such a performance will belong to some other author.
Addison.

My faults will not be hid, and it is no dispraise to me that they will not: the clearness of one's mind is never better proved than in discovering its own faults.
Pope.

TO DISPRAISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To blame; to censure; to condemn.
In praising Antony, I've disprais'd Cæsar.
Shakspere.

No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none: I disprais'd him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend.
Shakspere's Henry IV.

The criticks, while they like my wares, may dispraise my writing.
Spectator.

DISPRAISER. n. f. [from dispraise.] A censurer; one who blames. Diæ.

DISPRAISIBLE. adj. [from dispraise.] Unworthy of commendation. Diæ.

DISPRAISINGLY. adv. [from dispraise.] With blame; with censure.

Michael Cassio!

That came a wooing with you; many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en your part.
Shakspere's Othello.

TO DISPREAD. v. a. [dis and spread.] To spread different ways. In this word, and a few others, dis has the same force as in Latin composition, and means different ways; in different directions. This word is poetical.

As morning sun her beams dispreaden clear,
And in her face fair truth and mercy doth appear.
Spenser.

Over him, art, striving to compare
With nature, did an arbour green dispread, Framed of wanton ivy, flowing fair,
Through which the fragrant egantine did spread
His pricking arms, entrail'd with roses red.
Spenser.

Above, below, around, with art dispread,
The sure inclosure folds the genial bed.
Pope.

DISPROFIT. n. f. [dis and profit.] Loss; damage; detriment. Diæ.

DISPROOF. n. f. [dis and proof.] Confutation; conviction of error or falsehood.

His remark contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine.
Atterbury.

I need not offer any thing farther in support of one, or in disproof of the other.
Rogers.

TO DISPROPERT. v. a. [dis and property.] To dispossess of any property. Diæ.

DISPROPORTION. n. f. [dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in form or quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry; disparity.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion, and degree, Whereto we see in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Foul disproportion; thoughts unnatural.
Shaksp.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wise and frugal, could commit
Such disproportions; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater, so manyfold, to this one use.
Milton.

Perhaps, from greatness, state and pride,
Thus surprised, she may fall:

Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all.
Waller.

For their strength,
The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence.
Denham's Sophy.

What did the liquid to th' assembly call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?
First tell us, why did any come? next, why
In such a disproportion to the dry?
Blackmore.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion
to the desires and capacities of our soul.
Rogers.

TO DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

There fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part.
Shakspere.

Distance and men's fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontents
a gallant army, and already measured by the evening shadow.
Suckling.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company.
Peacham.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime.
Milton.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions:
through these false opticks all that you see is like the evening shadows,
disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance.
Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season.
Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual.
Smalridge.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts.
Broome.

DISPROPORTIONABLENESS. n. f. [from disproportionable.] Unsuitableness to something else.

DISPROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from disproportion.] Unsuitably; not symmetrically.

We have no reason to think much to sacrifice to God our dearest interests in this world, if we consider how disproportionably great the reward of our sufferings shall be in another.
Tillotson.

DISPROPORTIONAL. adj. [from disproportion.] Disproportionable; unsymmetrical; unsuitable in quantity or form to something else.

DISPROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from disproportional.] Unsuitably with respect to quantity or value.

DISPROPORTIONATE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsymmetrical; unsuitable to something else in bulk, form, or value.

None of our members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect.
Ray.

It is plain that men have agreed to a disproportionate and unequal possession of the earth.
Locke.

DISPROPORTIONATELY. adv. [from disproportionate.] Unsuitably; unsymmetrically.

DISPROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from disproportionate.] Unsuitableness in bulk, form, or value.

TO DISPROVE. v. a. [dis and prove.]

1. To confute an assertion; to convict of error or falsehood.

This exposition they plainly disprove, and shew by manifest reason, that of David the words of David could not possibly be meant.
Hooker.

This Westmoreland maintains,
And Warwick shall disprove it.
Shakspere.

The traitor's odious name
I first return, and then disprove thy claim.
Dryden's Fables.

It is easier to affirm than to disprove. Holder.
That false supposition I advanced in order to disprove it, and by that means to prove the truth of my doctrine. Atterbury.

We see the same assertions produced again, without notice of what hath been said to disprove them. Swift.

2. To convict of a practice of error.

They behold those things disproved, disannulled, and rejected, which use had made in a manner natural. Hooker.

If God did not forbid all indifferent ceremonies, then our conformity with the church of Rome in some such is not hitherto as yet disproved, although papists were unto us as heathens were unto Israel. Hooker.

3. To disapprove; to disallow.

Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that men are only not disproved, nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker.

DISPROVER. n. f. [from disprove.]

1. One that disproves or confutes.

2. One that blames; a censurer: if the following passage be not ill printed for disapprover.

The single example that our annals have yielded of two extremes, within so short time, by most of the same commendators and disprovers, would require no slight memorial. Wotton.

DISPUNISHABLE. adj. [dis and punishable.] Without penal restraint.

No leases of any part of the said lands shall ever be made, other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder, and not dispunishable of waste. Swift's Last Will.

To DISPURSE. v. a. [dis and purse.] To pay; to disburse. It is not certain that the following passage should not be written disburse.

Many a pound of my own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution. Shakespeare.

DISPUTABLE. adj. [from dispute.]

1. Liable to contest; controvertible; that for which something may be alleged on opposite sides.

If they are not in themselves disputable, why are they so much disputed? South.

2. Lawful to be contested.

Until any point is determined to be a law, it remains disputable by every subject. Swift.

DISPUTANT. n. f. [from dispute; disputans, Latin.] A controvertist; an arguer; a reasoner.

Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the unscholastick statesman that the world owed their peace, defence, and liberties. Locke.

Our disputants put me in mind of the skuttle fish, that, when he is unable to extricate himself, blackens all the water about him till he becomes invisible. Spectator.

DISPUTANT. adj. Disputing; engaged in controversy. Not in use.

Thou there wast found
Among the gravest rabbies, disputant
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Milton.

DISPUTATION. n. f. [from disputatio, Latin.]

1. The skill of controversy; argumentation.

Consider what the learning of disputation is, and how they are employed for the advantage of themselves or others, whose business is only the vain ostentation of sounds. Locke.

2. Controversy; argumental contest.

Well do I find, by the wise knitting together of your answer, that any disputation I can use is as much too weak as I unworthy. Sidney.

Till some admirable or unusual accident happens, as it hath in some, to work the beginning of a better alteration in the mind, disputation about the knowledge of God commonly prevaleth little. Hooker.

DISPUTATIOUS. adj. [from dispute.] Inclined to dispute; cavilling.

A man must be of a very disputatious temper, that enters into state controversies with any of the fair sex. Addison.

DISPUTATIVE. adj. [from dispute.] Disposed to debate; argumentative.

Perhaps this practice might not so easily be perverted, as to raise a cavilling, disputative, and sceptical temper in the minds of youth. Watts.

To DISPUTE. v. n. [disputo, Latin.]

To contend by argument; to altercate; to debate; to argue; to controvert.

If attempts of the pen have often proved unfit, those of the sword are more so, and fighting is a worse expedient than disputing. Decay of Piety.

He that, upon a true principle, lives without any disquiet of thought, may be said to be happy. L'Estrange.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet. Tillotson.

I had rather live in Ireland than under the frequent disquiets of hearing you are out of order. Swift.

DISQUIET. adj. Unquiet; uneasy; restless.

I pray you, husband, be not so disquiet;
The meat was well if you were so content. Shakespeare.

To DISQUIET. v. a. [from the noun.]

To disturb; to make uneasy; to harass; to vex; to fret; to deprive of tranquillity.

The proud Roman him disquieted. F. Queen.
Why art thou so vexed, O my soul? and why art thou so disquieted within me? Psalms.

By anger and impatience the mind is disquieted, and is not able easily to compose itself to prayer. Duppa.

Thou, happy creature, art secure
From all the torments we endure;
Despair, ambition, jealousy,
Lost friends, nor love, disquiets thee. Reston.

DISQUIETER. n. f. [from disquiet.] A disturber; a harasser.

DISQUIETLY. adv. [from disquiet.] Without rest; anxiously; uneasily; without calmness.

Treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves. Shakespeare.

He rested disquietly that night; but in the morning I found him calm. Wiseman.

DISQUIETNESS. n. f. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; restlessness; anxiety; disturbance.

All otherwise, said he, I riches rede,
And deem them root of all disquietness. Fairy Queen.

Arius won to himself both followers and great defenders; whereupon much disquietness ensued. Hooker.

DISQUIETUDE. n. f. [from disquiet.] Uneasiness; anxiety; disturbance; want of tranquillity.

Little happiness attends a great character, and to a multitude of disquietudes the desire of it subjects an ambitious mind. Addison's Spectator.

'Tis the best preservative from all those temporal fears and disquietudes, which corrupt the enjoyment, and embitter the lives, of men. Rogers.

DISQUISITION. n. f. [disquisitio, Latin.] Examination; disputative inquiry.

God hath reserved many things to his own resolution, whose determinations we cannot hope from flesh: but with reverence must suspend unto that great day, whose justice shall either condemn our curiosity, or resolve our disquisitions. Brown.
 'Tis indeed the proper place for this disquisition concerning the antediluvian earth. Woodward.
 The royal society had a good effect, as it turned many of the greatest geniuses of that age to the disquisitions of natural knowledge.

Addison's Spectator.

The nature of animal diet may be discovered by taste, and other sensible qualities, and some general rules, without particular disquisition upon every kind. Arbuthnot.

To DISRA'NK. v. a. [dis and rank.] To degrade from his rank. Dict.

DISREGA'RD. n. f. [dis and regard.] Slight notice; neglect; contempt.

To DISREGA'RD. v. a. [from the noun.] To slight; to neglect; to contemn.

Since we are to do good to the poor, to strangers, to enemies, those whom nature is too apt to make us despise, disregard, or hate; then undoubtedly we are to do good to all. Spratt.

Those fasts which God hath disregarded hitherto, he may regard for the time to come. Smalridge.

Studious of good, man disregarded fame, And useful knowledge was his eldest aim. Blackmore.

DISREGA'RDFUL. adj. [disregard and full.] Negligent; contemptuous.

DISREGA'RDFULLY. adv. [from disregardful.] Negligently; contemptuously.

DISRE'LISH. n. f. [dis and relish.]

Of they assay'd,

Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft With hatefullest disrelish, writh'd their jaws With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

2. Dislike of the palate; squeamishness.

Bread or tobacco may be neglected, where they are shewn not to be useful to health, because of an indifferency or disrelish to them. Locke.

To DISRE'LISH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make nauseous; to infect with an unpleasant taste.

Fruits of taste to please True appetite, and not disrelish thirst Of nectarous draughts between, from milky stream. Milton.

The same anxiety and solicitude that embittered the pursuit, disrelishes the fruition itself. Rogers.

2. To want a taste of; to dislike.

The world is become too busy for me: every body is so concerned for the publick, that all private enjoyments are lost, or disrelished. Pope.

DISREPUTA'TION. n. f. [dis and reputation.]

1. Disgrace; dishonour.

I will tell you what was the course in the happy days of queen Elizabeth, whom it is no disreputation to follow. Bacon.

2. Loss of reputation; ignominy.

The king fearing lest that the bad success might discourage his people, and bring disreputation to himself, forbade any report to be made. Hayward.
 Gluttony is not of so great disreputation amongst men as drunkenness. Taylor's Holy Living.

DISREPU'TE. n. f. [dis and repute.] Ill character; dishonour; want of reputation.

How studiously did they cast a slur upon the king's person, and bring his governing principles under a disrepute. South.

DISRESPE'CT. n. f. [dis and respect.] Incivility; want of reverence; irreverence; an act approaching to rudeness.

Any disrespect to acts of state, or to the persons of statesmen, was in no time more penal. Clarendon.

Aristotle writ a methodical discourse concerning these arts, chusing a certain benefit before the hazard that might accrue from the vain disrespects of ignorant persons. Wilkins.

What is more usual to warriors than impatience of bearing the least affront or disrespect? Pope.

DISRESPE'CTFUL. adj. [disrespect and full.] Irreverent; uncivil.

DISRESPE'CTFULLY. adv. [from disrespectful.] Irreverently; uncivilly.

We cannot believe our posterity will think so disrespectfully of their great grandmothers, as that they made themselves monstrous to appear amiable. Addison's Spectator.

To DISRO'BE. v. a. [dis and robe.] To undress; to uncover; to strip.

Thus when they had the witch disrobed quite, And all her filthy feature open shown, They let her go at will, and wander ways unknown. Spenser.

Kill the villain straight, Disrobe him of the matchless monument, Thy father's triumph o'er the savages. Shaks.

These two great peers were disrobed of their glory, the one by judgment, the other by violence. Wotton.

Who will be prevailed with to disrobe himself at once of all his old opinions, and pretences to knowledge and learning, and turn himself out stark naked in quest afresh of new notions? Locke.

DISRU'PTION. n. f. [disruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking asunder.

This secures them from disruption which they would be in danger of, upon a sudden stretch or contortion. Ray.

2. Breach; rent; dilaceration.

The agent which effected this disruption, and dislocation of the strata, was seated within the earth. Woodward.

If raging winds invade the atmosphere, Their force its curious texture cannot tear, Nor make disruption in the threads of air. Blackmore.

DISSATISFA'CTION. n. f. [dis and satisfaction.] The state of being dissatisfied; discontent; want of something to complete the wish.

He that changes his condition, out of impatience and dissatisfaction, when he has tried a new one, wishes for his old again. L'Estrange.

The ambitious man has little happiness, but is subject to much uneasiness and dissatisfaction. Addison's Spectator.

In vain we try to remedy the defects of our acquisition, by varying the object: the same dissatisfaction pursues us through the circle of created goods. Rogers.

DISSATISFA'CTORINESS. n. f. [from dissatisfactory.] Inability to give content.

DISSATISFA'CTORY. adj. [from dissatisfy.] Unable to give content.

To DISSA'TISFY. v. a. [dis and satisfy.]

1. To discontent; to displease.

The advantages of life will not hold out to the length of desire; and, since they are not big enough to satisfy, they should not be big enough to dissatisfy. Collier.

2. To fail to please; to offend by the want of something requisite.

I still retain some of my notions, after your lordship's having appeared dissatisfied with them. Locke.

To DISSE'CT. v. a. [dissecō, Latin.]

1. To cut in pieces. It is used chiefly of anatomical inquiries, made by separation of the parts of animal bodies.

No mask, no trick, no favour, no reserve; Dissect your mind, examine every nerve. Roscommon.

Following life in creatures we dissect, We lose it in the moment we detect. Pope.

2. To divide and examine minutely.

This paragraph, that has not one ingenious word throughout, I have dissected for a sample. Atterbury.

DISSE'CTION. n. f. [dissectio, Latin.]

1. The act of separating the parts of animal bodies; anatomy.

She cut her up; but, upon the dissection, found her just like other hens. L'Estrange.

I shall enter upon the dissection of a coquet's heart, and communicate that curious piece of anatomy. Addison.

2. Nice examination.

Such strict enquiries into nature, so true and so perfect a dissection of human kind, is the work of extraordinary diligence. Granville.

DISSE'ISIN. n. f. [from disseiser, French.]

An unlawful dispossessing a man of his land, tenement, or other immovable or incorporeal right. Corwell.

To DISSE'IZE. v. a. [disseiser, French.]

To dispossess; to deprive. It is commonly used of a legal act.

He so disseized of his griping grofs, The knight his thrillant spear again assay'd In his brass-plated body to emboss. Fairy Q.

If a prince should give a man, besides his ancient patrimony which his family had been disseized of, an additional estate, never before in the possession of his ancestors, he could not be said to re-establish lineal succession. Locke.

DISSE'IZOR. n. f. [from disseize.] He that dispossesses another.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. a. [disimulo, Lat. semblance, dissemblance, and probably dissembler, in old French.]

1. To hide under false appearance; to conceal; to pretend that not to be which really is.

She answered, that her soul was God's; and touching her faith, as she could not change, so she would not dissemble it. Hayward.

2. To pretend that to be which is not. This is not the true signification.

Your son Lucentio

Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him, Or both dissemble deeply their affections. Shaks.

In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue Had cunning art and sly persuasion hung; And real care in vain, and native love, In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

To DISSE'MBLE. v. n.

1. To play the hypocrite; to use false professions; to wheedle.

Ye dissembled in your hearts when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us. Jeremiah.

I would dissemble with my nature, where My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd I should do so in honour. Shakspeare's Coriol.
 Thy function too will varnish o'er our arts; And sanctify dissembling. Rowe.

2. Shakspeare uses it for fraudulent; unperforming.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion, Cheated of feature by dissembling nature, Deform'd; unfinish'd. Richard III.

DISSE'MBLER. n. f. [from dissemble.] A hypocrite; a man who conceals his true disposition.

Thou dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou. Shakspeare.

The French king, in the business of peace, was the greater dissembler of the two. Bacon.

Such an one, whose virtue forbiddeth him to be base and a dissembler, shall evermore hang under the wheel. Ruleigh.

The queen, with rage inflam'd,
Thus greets him: Thou dissembler, wouldst thou fly

Out of my arms by stealth? Denham.
Men will trust no farther than they judge a person for sincerity fit to be trusted: a discovered dissembler can achieve nothing great and considerable. South.

DISSEMBLINGLY. adv. [from dissemble.]
With dissimulation; hypocritically.

They might all have been either dissemblingly spoken, or falsely reported of the equity of the barbarous king. Knolles.

To DISSEMINATE. v. a. [diffeminio, Latin.] To scatter as seed; to sow;
to spread every way.

Ill uses are made of it many times in stirring up seditions, rebellions, in diffeminating of he-resses, and infusing of prejudices. Hammond.

There is a nearly uniform and constant fire or heat diffeminated throughout the body of the earth.
Woodward.

The Jews are indeed diffeminated through all the trading parts of the world. Addison.

By firmness of mind, and freedom of speech, the gospel was diffeminated at first, and must still be maintained. Atterbury.

DISSEMINATION. n. f. [diffeminatio, Lat.]
The act of scattering like seed; the act of sowing or spreading.

Though now at the greatest distance from the beginning of error, yet we are almost lost in its diffeminatio, whose ways are boundless, and confess no circumscription. Brown.

DISSEMINATOR. n. f. [diffeminator, Lat.]
He that scatters; a scatterer; a sower;
a spreader.

Men, vehemently thirsting after a name in the world, hope to acquire it by being the diffeminators of novel doctrines. Decay of Piety.

DISSENSION. n. f. [diffensio, Latin.] Disagreement; strife; discord; contention; difference; quarrel; breach of union.

Friends now fast sworn,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, whose exercise,

Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a diffension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no diffension hinder government. Shaksp.

He appealed the diffension then arising about religion. Knolles.

Grown
In wealth and multitude, factious they grow;
But first among the priests diffension springs.
Milton.

Debates, diffensions, uproars are thy joy;
Provok'd without offence, and practis'd to destroy.
Dryden.

DISSENSIOUS. adj. [from diffension.] Disposed to discord; quarrelsome; factious; contentious.

Either in religion they have a diffensious head, or in the commonwealth a factious head. Ascham.

Who are they that complain unto the king
That I am stern? They love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such diffensious rumours.
Shakspeare.

You diffensious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs. Shakspeare.

To DISSENT. v. n. [diffentio, Latin.]

1. To disagree in opinion; to think in a contrary manner.

Let me not be any occasion to defraud the publick of what is best, by any morose or perverse
diffentings. King Charles.

What cruelty of heathens has not been matched by the inhumanity of diffenting christians?

Decay of Piety.

There are many opinions in which multitudes of men diffent from us, who are as good and wise
as ourselves. Addison.

2. To differ; to be of a contrary nature.

We see a general agreement in the secret opinion of men, that every man ought to embrace the religion which is true, and to shun, as hurtful, whatever diffenteth from it, but that most which doth farthest diffent. Hooker.

3. To differ from the established church.

How will diffenting brethren relish?
What will malignants say? Hudibras.

DISSENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disagreement; difference of opinion; declaration of difference of opinion.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are grounds to suspect that there is proof as considerable to be produced on the contrary side; there suspense or diffent are voluntary actions. Locke.

What could be the reason of this general diffent from the notion of the resurrection, seeing that almost all of them did believe the immortality of the soul? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Contrariety of nature; opposite quality.
Not in use.

The diffents of the menstrual or strong waters may hinder the incorporation, as well as the dis- sent of the metals. Therefore where the men-strua are the same, and yet the incorporation followeth not, the diffent is in the metals. Bacon.

DISSENTANEOUS. adj. [from diffent.] Disagreeable; inconsistent; contrary.

DISSENTER. n. f. [from diffent.]

1. One that disagrees, or declares his disagreement, from an opinion.

They will admit of matter of fact, and agree with diffenters in that; but differ only in assigning of reasons. Locke.

2. One who, for whatever reasons, refuses the communion of the English church.

DISSERTATION. n. f. [differtatio, Latin.]
A discourse; a disquisition; a treatise.

Plutarch, in his differtation upon the Poets, quotes an instance of Homer's judgment in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction. Broom on the Odyssey.

To DISSE'VE. v. a. [dis and serve.] To do injury to; to mischief; to damage;
to hurt; to harm.

Having never done the king the least service,
he took the first opportunity to disserve him, and engaged against him from the beginning of the rebellion. Clarendon.

Desires of things of this world, by their tendency, promote or disserve our interests in another.
Rogers.

DISSE'VICE. n. f. [dis and service.] Injury; mischief; ill turn.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any diservice unto relaters who have well deserved. Brown.

Great sicknesses make a sensible alteration, but smaller indispositions do a proportionable dis- service. Cellier.

DISSE'VICEABLE. adj. [from diservice.]
Injurious; mischievous; hurtful.

DISSE'VICEABLENESS. n. f. [from disser- viceable.] Injury; harm; hurt; mischief; damage.

All action being for some end, and not the end itself, its aptness to be commanded or for-bidden must be founded upon its serviceableness or diserviceableness to some end. Norris.

To DISSE'TTLE. v. a. [dis and settle.] To unsettle; to unfix.

To DISSE'VE. v. a. [dis and sever. In this word the particle dis makes no change in the signification, and therefore the word, though supported by great authorities, ought to be ejected from our language.] To part in two;
to break; to divide; to funder; to separate; to disunite.

Shortly had the storm so dissevered the company, which the day before had tarried together, that most of them never met again, but were swallowed up. Sidney.

The dissevering of fleets hath been the overthrow of many actions. Raleigh.

All downright rains dissever the violence of outrageous winds, and level the mountainous billows. Raleigh.

Dissever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again.
Shakspeare.

The meeting points the sacred hair dissever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever.
Pope.

DISSIDENCE. n. f. [diffideo, Latin.] Discord; disagreement. Dia.

DISSILIENCE. n. f. [diffilio, Latin.] The act of starting asunder.

DISSILIENT. adj. [diffiliens, Lat.] Starting asunder; bursting in two.

DISSILIATION. n. f. [diffilio, Lat.] The act of bursting in two; the act of starting different ways.

The air having much room to receive motion, the diffiliation of that air was great. Boyle.

DISSIMILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into diffimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from fallet oil.
Boyle.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homiogeneous, and similar; and that,
whose rays are some more refrangible than others,
I call compound, heterogeneous, and diffimilar.
Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those diffimilar parts can have a like situation.
Bentley.

DISSIMILARITY. n. f. [from diffimilar.]
Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of diffimilarity must repel these beings from their centre: so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre;
and the principle of diffimilarity, forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Cheyne.

DISSIMILITUDE. n. f. [diffimilitudo, Lat.]
Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous diffimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter diffimilitude, either with Egyptians or any other nation. Hooker.

The diffimilitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stillinger.

As human society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain diffimilitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding diffimilitude, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

DISSIMULATION. n. f. [diffimulatio, Lat.]
The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Disimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon.

He added not; and Satan, bowing low
His grey disimulation, disappear'd Into thin air diffus'd. Milton.

Disimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind; in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries. South.

DISSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air, it exaleth. Bacon.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable. Woodward's Natural History.

TO DISSIPATE. v. a. [dissipatus, Lat.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

The heat at length grows so great, that it again dissipates and bears off those corpuscles which it brought. Woodward.

It is covered with skin and hair, to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon. Ray.

The circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm. Thomson.

2. To scatter the attention.

This slavery to his passions produced a life irregular and dissipated. Savage's Life.

3. To spend a fortune.

The wherry that contains
Of dissipated wealth the poor remains. London.

DISSIPATION. n. s. [dissipatio, Latin.]

1. The act of dispersion.

The effects of heat are most advanced when it worketh upon a body without loss or dissipation of the matter. Bacon.

Abraham was contemporary with Paleg, in whose time the famous dissipation of mankind, and distinction of languages, happened. Hale.

2. The state of being dispersed.

Now
Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout. Milton.

Where the earth contains nitre within it, if that heat which is continually steaming out of the earth be preserved; its dissipation prevented, and the cold kept off by some building, this alone is ordinarily sufficient to raise up the nitre. Woodward.

3. Scattered attention.

I have begun two or three letters to you by snatches, and been prevented from finishing them by a thousand avocations and dissipation. Swift.

TO DISSOCIATE. v. a. [dissocio, Latin.]

To separate; to disunite; to part.

In the dissociating action, even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there perhaps vanish some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form. Boyle.

DISSOLVABLE. adj. [from dissolve.] Capable of dissolution; liable to be melted.

Such things as are not dissolvable by the moisture of the tongue, act not upon the taste. Newton.

DISSOLUBLE. adj. [dissolubilis, Latin.]

Capable of separation; having one part separable from another by heat or moisture.

Nodules, reposed in cliffs amongst the earth, being hard and not so dissoluble, are left behind. Woodward's Natural History.

DISSOLUBILITY. n. s. [from dissoluble.]

Liableness to suffer a disunion of parts by heat or moisture; capacity of being dissolved.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of alteration, or corruption, from the dissolubility of their parts, and the coalition of several particles endued with contrary and destructive qualities each to other. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO DISSOLVE. v. a. [dissolvo, Latin.]

1. To destroy the form of any thing by disuniting the parts with heat or moisture; to melt; to liquefy.

I have heard of anchovies dissolved in sauce. Dryden.

The whole terrestrial globe was taken all to pieces, and dissolved, at the deluge. Woodw.

2. To break; to disunite in any manner.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? 2 Peter.

3. To loose; to break the ties of any thing.

Down fell the duke, his joints dissolv'd asunder,

Blind with the light, and stricken dead with wonder. Fairfax.

Witness these ancient empires of the earth,
In height of all their flowing wealth dissolv'd. Milton.

The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryden.

4. To separate persons united: as, to dissolve a league.

She and I, long since contracted,
Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve us. Shakspeare.

5. To break up assemblies.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, parliaments are assembled; and by him alone they are prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon to Villiers.

6. To solve; to clear.

And I have heard of thee, that thou canst make interpretations, and dissolve doubts. Daniel.

7. To break an enchantment.

Highly it concerns his glory now
To frustrate and dissolve the magick spells. Milton.

8. To be relaxed by pleasure.

Angels dissolv'd in hallelujahs lie. Dryden.

TO DISSOLVE. v. n.

1. To be melted; to be liquefied.

All putrefaction, if it dissolve not in rarefaction, will in the end issue into plants or living creatures bred of putrefaction. Bacon.

As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run
And trickle into drops before the sun,
So melts the youth, and languishes away. Addison's Ovid.

2. To sink away; to fall to nothing.

If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,

The best of commentators can but guess at his meaning; none can be certain he has divined rightly. Dryden.

He took it with a bow, and soon divin'd
The seeming toy was not for nought design'd. Dryden.

In change of torment would be ease:
Could you divine what lovers bear,
Even you, Prometheus, would confess
There is no vulture like despair. Granville.

DIVINELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.
Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired. Locke.

This topick was very fitly and divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens. Bentley.

2. Excellently; in the supreme degree.
The Grecians most divinely have given to the active perfection of men, a name expressing both beauty and goodness. Hooker.

She fair, divinely fair! fit love for gods. Milton.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge, Greece.

3. In a manner noting a deity.
His golden horns appear'd,
That on the forehead shone divinely bright,
And o'er the banks diffus'd a yellow light. Addison.

DIVINENESS. n. f. [from divine.]

1. Divinity; participation of the divine nature.
Is it then impossible to distinguish the divineness of this book from that which is humane? Grew.

2. Excellence in the supreme degree.
By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon: behold divineness
No elder than a boy. Shakspeare.

DIVINER. n. f. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dronio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me. Shakspeare.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deccits in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.
If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts, that can assure him that he was thinking. Locke.

DIVINERESS. n. f. [from diviner.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVINITY. n. f. [divinité, Fr. divinitas, Lat.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stillington.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes, Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakspeare.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error. Shakspeare.

Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

6. Something supernatural.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakspeare.

DIVISIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Latin.]

Capable of being divided into parts;
discerptible; separable.

When we frame in our minds any notion of matter, we conceive nothing else but extension and bulk, which is impenetrable, or divisible and passive. Bentley.

DIVISIBILITY. n. s. [divisibilitas, Fr.] The quality of admitting division or separation of parts.

The most palpable absurdities will press the asserters of infinite divisibility. Glanville.

This will easily appear to any one, who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

DIVISIBleness. n. s. [from divisible.]

Divisibility.
Naturalists disagree about the origin of motion, and the indefinite divisibleness of matter. Boyle.

DIVISION. n. s. [diviso, Latin.]

1. The act of dividing any thing into parts.

2. The state of being divided.

Thou madest the spirit of the firmament, and commanded it to part asunder, and to make a division betwixt the waters. 2 Esdras.

3. That by which any thing is kept apart; partition.

4. The part which is separated from the rest by dividing.

If we look into communities and divisions of men, we observe that the discreet man, not the witty, guides the conversation. Addison.

5. Difunion; discord; difference.

There was a division among the people, because of him. John.

As to our divisions with the Romanists, were our differences the product of heat, they would, like small clefts in the ground, want but a cool season to cement them. Decay of Piety.

6. One of the parts into which a discourse is distributed.

In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.

Express the heads of your divisions in as few and clear words as you can, otherwise I never can be able to retain them. Swift.

7. Space between the notes of musick, or parts of a musical composition; just time.

Thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division, to her lute. Shakspeare.

Our tongue will run divisions in a tune, not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere. Glanville.

8. Distinction.

I will put a division between my people and thy people. Exodus.

9. [In arithmetick.] The separation or parting of any number or quantity given, into any parts assigned. Cocker.

Abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

DIVISOR. n. s. [divisor, Latin.] The number given, by which the dividend is divided; the number which shows how many parts the dividend is to be divided into.

DIVORCE. n. s. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Latin.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia. Dryden.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections, in her, from my religion. King Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms. Ayliffe.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakspeare.

To DIVORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and, not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Hooker.

The continent and the island were continued together, within men's remembrance, by a drawbridge; but are now divorced by the down-fallen cliffs. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

So seem'd her youthful soul not easily forc'd,
Or from so fair, so sweet a seat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wert not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring on adultress. Shakspeare.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind that should possess them, divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.

4. To take away; to put away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shakspeare.
Aërial pasture the lungs with gentle force Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce. Blackmore.

DIVORCEMENT. n. s. [from divorce.]

Divorce; separation of marriage.
Write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. Deut.

DIVORCER. n. s. [from divorce.] The person or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage. Drammond.

DIURETICK. adj. [diureticus, Latin.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages; such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbutnot.

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretick strains. Young.

DIURNAL. adj. [diurnus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year,
the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter sere foment. Milton.

2. Constituting the day.

Why does he order the diurnal hours
To leave earth's other part, and rise in ours? Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.

The prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither rowl'd Diurnal. Milton.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been, from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind. Locke.

DIURNAL. n. s. [diurnal, Fr.] A journal; a day-book.

DIURNALLY. adv. [from diurnal.]

Daily; every day.
As we make the enquiries, we shall diurnally communicate them to the publick. Tatler.

DIURNITY. n. s. [diurnitas, Lat.]

Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said that that generation should not pass till it was fulfilled, they needed not suppose of such diurnity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DIVULGE. v. a. [divulgo, Lat.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed, than the contrary much divulged. Hooker.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton. Shakspeare.

These answers, in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

You are deprived of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim; to declare by a publick act.

This is true glory and renown, when God,
Looking on th' earth, with approbation marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause Recount his praises. Milton.

DIVULGER. n. f. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers.
King Charles.

DIVULSION. n. f. [divulsio, Lat.] The act of plucking away.

Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testicles.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIZEN. v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.] To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word.

Your ladyship lifts up the sash to be seen;
For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen.
Swift.

DIZZARD. n. f. [from dizzy.] A block-head; a fool. Dist.

DIZZINESS. n. f. [from dizzy.] Giddiness; whirl in the head.

Fixed seriousness heats the brain in some to distraction, and causeth an aching and dizziness in sounder heads.
Glanville.

DIZZY. adj. [ḍīrī, ḍīrīg, Saxon.]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain
Surpris'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swam
In darkness. Milton.

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful

And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low! Shak.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue canst thou gain?
Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,
Longer than thou canst feed them on thy cost?
Milton.

TO DIZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomedes. Shakespeare.

To divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakespeare.

TO DO. v. a. Thou do'st, he doth or does; preter. did; part. pass. done. [don, Sax. doen, Dutch.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.

Flee evil, and do good. Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;
And he hath nothing done, that doth not all.
Daniel.

Learn to live well, that thou mayst die so too;
To live and die is all we have to do. Denham.

What is the reason a man's arm won't smile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance?
Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
Shaksp.

Pindarus is come

To do you salutation from his master. Shaksp.

The jury prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences. Bacon.

4. To cause. This structure is obsolete.

A fatal plague which many did to dye. Spenser.

Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,

Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,

Nothing but death can do me to respire. Fairy Q.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner. Aels.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakespeare.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame. Shakespeare.

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me. Shakespeare.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
She did me right, and satisfied my vengeance. Rowe.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort: commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jerem.

8. To perform for the benefit or hurt of another.

I know what God will do for me. Samuel.

Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall be accepted and rewarded as done to our Saviour himself. Atterbury.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Timothy.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with steams of so dangerous a nature. Boyle.

What had I to do with kings and courts?
My humble lot had cast me far beneath them. Rowe.

11. To gain; to effect by influence.

It is much that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. Shakespeare.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;

And whilst we breathe, take him to do him dead. Shakespeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,

Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare.

Go to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done; but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read. Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run. Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

They did their work and din'd. Prior.

When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?
Shakespeare.

The lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death. Shakespeare.

16. The phrase, what to do with, signifies how to bestow; what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to get rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

TO DO. v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, so every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude: only in the compound preterit.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the place. Spechtator.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice: only in the compound preterit.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stillington.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown. Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

Good woman, how do'st thou?
—The better that it pleases your good worship to ask. Shakespeare.

5. To succeed; to fulfil a purpose.

Come, 'tis no matter; we shall do without him. Addison.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier.

6. To deal with.

No man, who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

7. To Do is used for any verb, to save the repetition of the word: as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupids paint, thus poets do
A naked god, blind, young, with arrows two. Sidney.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do. Tillotson.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arbuthnot.

8. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request: as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently. Taylor.

—Loose me.—I will free thee. Dryden.

9. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively: as, I do love, or I love; I did love, or I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first Person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest.

Bacon's Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite.

Dryden.

Expletives their feeble aid do join.

Pope.

10. Sometimes emphatically: as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul

But I do love thee; and when I love thee not, Chaos is come again.

Shakspeare.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition: as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

To DOAT. v. n. See To DOTE.

DO'CIBLE. adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The asinine feed of sow-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docile age.

Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. f. [from docible.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general.

Walton's Angler.

DO'CILE. adj. [docilis, Latin.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful.

Ellis' Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill.

Prior.

DOCI'LITY. n. f. [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Latin.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.

South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? the docility of an elephant, and the infatigability of a camel for travelling in deserts?

Grew.

DOCK. n. f. [bocca, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb.

Miller.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckfies, burs, Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakspeare.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose;
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know,

Love rooted out, again will never grow.

Swift.

DOCK. n. f.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula.

Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. f. [as some imagine, of doxion.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatswain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please.

Howel.

There are docks for their galleys and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations.

Addison.

To Dock. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.

2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass.

Swift.

3. To cut off a reckoning; to cut off an entail.

4. To lay the ship in a dock.

DO'CKET. n. f. A direction tied upon goods; a summary of a larger writing.

Did.

DO'CTOR. n. f. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import, it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring.

Shakspeare.

Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws.

Acts.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes.

Danham.

Each profelyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest.

Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too.

Shakspeare.

How does your patient, doctor?—
—Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick coming fancies.

Shakspeare.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother.

Grov. of Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe;
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.

Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest.

Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor.

Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school.

Digby of Bodies.

To DO'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure: to treat with medicines. A low word.

DO'CTORAL. adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

DO'CTORALLY. adv. [from doctoral.] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his pulse, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure.

Hakewill.

DO'CTORSHIP. n. f. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

From a scholar he became a fellow, and then the president of the college, after he had received all the graces and degrees, the professorship and the doctorship.

Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL. adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject.

South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument.

Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy?

Hooker.

DOCTRINAL. n. f. Something that is part of doctrine.

Not such as assent to every word in scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ.

South.

DOCTRINALLY. adv. [from doctrine.]

In the form of doctrine; positively, as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points.

Ray.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or matter; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not, either at one time or other.

Hooker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them.

Atterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other.

Watts.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine.

Mark.

DO'CUMENT. n. f. [documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors.

Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time.

Watts.

2. Precept, in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard.

Government of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Harvey.

DO'DDER. n. f. [touteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererescant plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,

Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

Dryden's Aeneid.

The peasants were enjoin'd

Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.

Dryden's Fables.

DODE'CAGON. n. f. [dodexa and gonia.]

A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMORION. n. f. [dōdekateimōrion.] The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:
Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows straight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole and one half portion of the signs.

Creech.

TO DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift, and play sly tricks, like a dog.] The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgie and dodge in the amends.

Hale's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God.

South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.

Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; she dodged with me above thirty years.

Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time.

Swift.

DO'DKIN. n. f. [duytken, Dutch.] A doit-kin, or little doir; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

I would not buy them for a doitkin.

Lily's Grammar construed.

DO'DMAN. n. f. The name of a fish.

Fish that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the craw-fish, the hodmandod or doitman, and the tortoise.

Bacon.

DOE. n. f. [da, Saxon; daa, Danish; dama, Latin.] A she deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. Shakspeare's As you like it.
Bucks have horns, does none. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fearful doe

And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go.

Dryden's Virgil.

DOE. n. f. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into
The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras.

DO'ER. n. f. [from To do.]

1. One that does any thing good or bad.
So foul a thing, O! thou injustice art,
That tort'rest both the doer and distressed.

Daniel.

It may be indeed a publick crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption.

South.

2. Actor; agent.

Sith thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten.

Hooker.

3. Performer.

One judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs.

Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not my lord, we will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Shakspeare.

VOL. I.

They are great speakers but small doers; greater in shew than in deed.

Knolles' History.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only.

Common Prayer.

In this we shew ourselves weak, and unapt to be doers of his will, in that we take upon us to be controllers of his wisdom.

Hooker.

DOES. The third person from do, for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries.

Locke.

TO DOFF. v. a. [from do off.] The word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

1. To put off drefs.

You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.

Shakspeare's Henry iv.

Doff those links.

Milton's Agonistes.

Nature, in awe to him,

Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.

That judge is hot, and doffs his gown.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide.

Rowe.

2. To strip; to develt of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear

Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?

Heav'n's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

Crashaw.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device,
Iago; and rather keep'st from me all convenience, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.

Shakspeare's Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.

—Canst thou so doff me?

Shakspeare.

DOG. n. f. [dogge, Dutch; canis, Lat.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bull-dog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion:

Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing naught, like dogs, but following.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog?

Locke.

The clamour roars of men, and boys and dogs.

Thomson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dogdays.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides
And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.

Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

I never heard a passion so confus'd,

So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shakspeare.
Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers.

Philippians.

4. To give or send to the Dogs; to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs?

Pope.

5. It is used as the term for the male of several species: as, the dog fox, the dog otter.

If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes.

Shakspeare.

The same ill taste of sense will serve to join
Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine.

Dryden.

6. Dog is a particle added to any thing, to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness: as, dog rose.

TO DOG. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt, as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murderer. Shakspeare.

I, his despicable Juno, sent him forth

From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth.

Shakspeare.

Sorrow *dogg*ing sin,

Afflictions sorted.

Herbert.

I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our renowned sister.

Milton.

These spiritual joys are *dogg*ed by no sad sequels.

Glanville.

I have been pursued, *dogg*ed, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure.

Pope.

Hate dogs their rise, and insult mocks their fall.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

DOG-FISHER. n. f. [dog and fisher.] A kind of fish.

The dog-fisher is good against the falling sickness.

Walton.

DOG-TEETH. n. f. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders; the eye-teeth.

The best instruments for dividing of herbs are incisor-teeth; for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders, or mill teeth; for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dogteeth.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

DOG-TRICK. n. f. [dog and trick.] An ill turn; surly or brutal treatment.

Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick; I'll make you know your rider.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

DO'GBANE. n. f. [dog and bane.] A plant.

Miller.

DOGBERRY-TREE. A kind of cherry.

DO'GBOLT. n. f. [dog and bolt.] Of this word I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flower is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt, or flower for dogs.

His only solace was, that now

His dogbolt fortune was so low,

That either it must quickly end,

Or turn about again, and mend.

Hudibras.

DO'GBRIAR. n. f. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbaton.

DO'GCHEAP. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dog's meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.

Good store of harlots, say you, and dogcheap?

Dryden.

DO'GDAYS. n. f. [dog and days.] The days in which the dogstar rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome.

Nor was it more in his power to be without promotion and titles, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth. Clarendon.

Do'GDRAW. n. f. [dog and draw.] A manifest apprehension of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand. Corwell.

DOGE. n. f. [doge, Italian.] The title of the chief magistrate of Venice and Genoa.

Doria has a statue at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the title of deliverer of the commonwealth. Addison.

Do'GFISH. n. f. [from dog and fish.] Another name for a shark.

It is part of the jaw of a shark, or dogfish. Woodward.

Do'GFLY. n. f. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.

Thump-buckler Mars began,
And at Minerva with a lance of brass he head-long ran;

These vile words ushering his blows, Thou dog-fly, what's the cause

Thou makest gods fight thus? Chapman's Iliad.

Do'GGED. adj. [from dog.] Sullen; four; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.

Shakspeare's King John.

Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whole over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life. Shaksp.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,
But fortune unto them turn'd dogged. Hudibras.

Do'GGEDLY. adv. [from dogged.] Sullenly; gloomily; fourly; morosely.

Do'GGEDNESS. n. f. [from dogged.] Gloom of mind; sullenness; moroseness.

Do'GGER. n. f. [from dog, for its meanness. Skinner.] A small ship with one mast.

Do'GGEREL. adj. [from dog.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.

Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times
Shall live, in spite of their own dogg'el rhymes. Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all dogg'el rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggrel, like that of Hudibras. Addison's Spectator.

Do'GGEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in dogg'el, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden's Juvenal.

The vilest dogg'el Grubstreet sends
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

Do'GGISH. adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

Do'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters, Shakspeare.

Do'GHOLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakspeare.

But could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too, Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden's Juvenal.

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole ck'd with ends of wall. Pope.

Do'GKENNEL. n. f. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dog-kennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.

I am desir'd to recommend a dogkennel to any that shall want a pack. Tatler.

Do'GLOUSE. n. f. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

Do'GMA. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DOGMA'TICAL. adj. [from dogma.] Authoritative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South.

DOGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

Do'GMATIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glanville.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts.

To Do'GMATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.]

To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,
Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;
Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmore.

DOGMATIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on papists or protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

Do'GROSE. n. f. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrescence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Derham.

Do'GSLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addison.

Do'GSMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogfmeat to 'em. Dryden.

Do'GSTAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dogstar's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addison.

Do'GSTOOTH. n. f. [from dog and tooth.] A plant. Miller.

Do'GTROT. n. f. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode
A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.

DOGWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogweary. Shakspeare.

Do'GWOOD. n. f. A species of cornelian cherry.

Doi'LY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.

Do'INGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly.—
—But how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air! Shaksp.

2. Feats; actions: good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches, and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing, let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakspeare.

At length a reverend fire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testified against their ways. Milton.

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with curtesy. Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.

DOL

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.
Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings?
Hooker.
6. Festivity; merriment: as, jolly doings.
7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low mean language.
After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms.
Swift.

DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doight, Erse.] A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.
Shakspeare's Tempest.

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit.
Pope.

DOLE. n. f. [from deal; dælan, Sax.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.

It was your presumise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.
Shakspeare.

The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.
Bacon.

At her general dole,
Each receives his ancient soul.
Cleaveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.

Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.
Shakspeare.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be 's dole.
Hudibras.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.

They had such firm dependence on the day,
That need grew pamp'rd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall.
Dryden.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Blows dealt out.

What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way?
Milton.

5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery. Obsolete.

Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping.
Shakspeare.

Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense,
Dole with delight.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

To DOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute.
Diæ.

DOLE. n. f. Void space left in tillage.
Diæ.

DO'LEFUL. adj. [dole and full.]

1. Sorrowful; dismal; expressing grief; querulous.

She earnestly entreated to know the cause thereof, that either she might comfort or accompany her doleful humour.
Sidney.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread so doleful lay.
Spenser.

With screwed face, and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances.
South.

DOL

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins.
Dryden.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.

How oft my doleful fire cried to me, tarry,
son,
When first he spied my love!
Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.

It watereth the heart to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life.
Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell!
Milton.

Happy the mortal man, who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of mis'ry pass'd;
Who to his destin'd stage has carried on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down.
Prior.

DO'LEFULLY. adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.

DO'LEFULNESS. n. f. [from doleful.]

Doll Tearsheet.
Shakspeare.

2. A little girl's puppet or baby.

DO'LLAR. [daler, Dutch.] A Dutch and German coin of different value, from about two shillings and sixpence to four and sixpence.

He disburs'd
Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use.
Shakspeare.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] That causes grief or pain.

The pain returned, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.
Ray.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick.
Arbuth. on Air.

DO'LOUS. adj. [from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.

We are taught, by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy.
Hooker.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I spake t' you for your comfort.
Shakspeare.

Through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp, Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death.
Milton.

Talk not of ruling in this dol'rous gloom,
Nor think vain words, he cried, can ease my doom.
Pope.

2. Painful.

Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion.
More's Antidote against Atheism.

DOM

DO'LOUS. n. f. [dolor, Latin.]

1. Grief; sorrow.

I've words too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal,
To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart.
Shakspeare.

2. Lamentation; complaint.

Never troubling him either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy; but rather fitting to his dolour dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortunes.
Sidney.

3. Pain; pang.

A mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolours of death.
Bacon.

DO'LPHIN. n. f. [delphin, Latin; though the dolphin is supposed to be not the same fish.] The name of a fish.

His delights
Were dolphin like; they shew'd his back above
The element they liv'd in.
Shakspeare.

Draw boys riding upon goats, eagles, and dolphins.
Peacham.

DOLT. n. f. [dol, Teutonic.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thick-skull; a loggerhead.

Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect
To those high pow'rs, which idly sit above.
Sidney.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt: oh gull, oh dolt,
As ignorant as dirt!
Shakspeare's Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,
Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;
They neither have the hearts to stay,
Nor wit enough to run away.
Hudibras.

Wood's adul't'rate copper,
Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunder-bolts.
Swift.

DO'LTISH. adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown that ever was without the privilege of a bauble.
Sidney.

DOME. n. f. [dome, French, from domus, Latin.]

1. A building; a house; a fabrick.

Best be he call'd among good men,
Who to his God this column rais'd:
Though lightning strike the dome again,
The man who built it shall be prais'd.
Prior.
Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest
Assur'd in my faith, a friendly guest;
Approach the dome, the social banquet share.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

DOMESTICAL. } adj. [domesticus, Latin.]
DOMESTICK. } tin.]

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestical; such as that which the prophet implieth, saying, Can a mother forget her child?
Hooker.

DOM

The practical knowledge of the domestick duties is the principal glory of a woman. Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestick celebration of the pass-over, they divided supper into two courses. Hooker.
Beholding thus, O happy as a queen!
We cry; but shift the gaudy, flatt'ring scene,
View her at home in her domestick light,
For thither she must come, at least at night. Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestick animal. Addison.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestick evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them. Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakspeare.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestick and particular broils
Are not the question here. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Such they were who might presume t'have done
Much for the king and honour of the state;
Having the chiefest actions undergone,
Both foreign and domestick, of late. Daniel.
Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be, who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestick dissensions. King Charles.

To DOME'STICATE. v. a. [from domestick.] To make domestick; to withdraw from the publick. Clarissa.

DOME'STICK. n. f. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes: he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestick, and yet a stranger too. South.

To DO'MIFY. v. a. [domifico, Latin.] To tame. Diſ.

DO'MINANT. adj. [dominant, French; dominans, Lat.] Predominant; presiding; ascendant.

To DO'MINATE. v. a. [dominatus, Latin.] To predominate; to prevail over the rest.

The dominating humour makes the dream. Dryden.

DOMINA'TION. n. f. [dominatio, Latin.]

1. Power; dominion.

Thou and thine usurp
The domination, royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy. Shakspeare, King John.

2. Tyranny; insolent authority.

Maximus traded with the Goths in the product of his own estate in Thracia, the place of his nativity; whither he retired, to withdraw from the unjust domination of Opilius Macrinus. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'ns, and all the powers therein,
By thee created; and by thee threw down
Th' aspiring dominations. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Hear, all ye angels, progeny of light,
Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, pow'rs! Milton.

DO'MINATIVE. adj. [from dominate.] Imperious; insolent. Diſ.

DOMINATOR. n. f. [Latin.] The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this north-west part of the world, which maketh the people impatient of servitude, lovers of liberty martial, and courageous. Camden's Remains

DON

To DOMINE'ER. v. n. [dominor, Latin.]

To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without controul.

Go to the feast, revel, and domineer,
Carouse full measure. Shakspeare.
The voice of conscience now is low and weak, chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little ends secure;
He sighs for freedom, she for pow'r;
His wishes tend abroad to roam,
And hers to domineer at home. Prior.

DOMINICAL. adj. [dominicalis, Latin.]

That notes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations. Holder on Time.

DOMINION. n. f. [dominium, Latin.]

1. Sovereign authority; unlimited power.

They on the earth
Dominion exercise, and in the air, Chiefly on man. Milton.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation: but man over man
He made not lord. Milton.
Blest use of pow'r, O virtuous pride in kings!
And like his bounty whence dominion springs. Tickel.

2. Power; right of possession or use, without being accountable.

He could not have private dominion over that,
which was under the private dominion of another. Locke.

3. Territory; region; district: considered as subject.

The donations of bishopricks the kings of England did ever retain in all their dominions, when the pope's usurped authority was at the highest. Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; ascendant.

Objects placed foremost ought to be more finished than those cast behind, and to have dominion over things confused and transient. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers. Colossians.

DON. n. f. [dominus, Latin.] The Spanish title for a gentleman: as, Don Quixote. It is with us used ludicrously.

To the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

To DON. v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to invest with: the contrary to doff. Obsolete.

The purple morning left her crimson bed,
And don'd her robes of pure vermillion hue. Fairfax.
Her helm the virgin don'd. Fairfax.
What! should I don this robe, and trouble you. Shakspeare.

DO'NARY. n. f. [donarium, Latin.] A thing given to sacred uses.

DONA'TION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given: which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

DOO

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd;
Other donation none thou canst produce. Milton.

DO'NATIVE. n. f. [donatif, French; from donatus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shews and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Corwell.

Never did steeple carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleveland.

DONE. The part. pass. of To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof who so did eat, eftsoons did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded: when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakspeare's Tempest.
One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
—Done: but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleveland.
Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

DO'NION. n. f. [now corrupted to dun-geon, from domaionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,
Which of the castle was the chief dungeon,
Wherein the knightes were in prison,
Was evin joynant to the garden-wall,
Ther as this Emely had her playeing. Chaucer.

DO'NOR. n. f. [from donor, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden's Juvenal.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

DO'NSHIP. n. f. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,
Your bosom-friends, as you suppose;
But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

DOO'DLE. n. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little: faineant.] A trifler; an idler.

To DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice full'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didst not doom
So strictly, but much more to pity incline.
Milton.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.
Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,
Dooming that son to be the fire
Of such another son.
Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave.
Shakspeare.

5. To define; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,
Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land.
Dryden's Æneid.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.
Granville.

DOOM. n. f. [dom, Sax. doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halts on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.
Shakspeare.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom applied,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.
Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe.
Milton.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all Hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or ex-cusing him.
Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out:
Strew good luck, ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom.
Shaksp.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently us'd.
—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford.
Shakspeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her doom.
Dryden's Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom;
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
Pope.

DOOMSDAY. n. f. [doom and day.]

1. The day of final and universal judgment; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out,
and run,
As it were doomsday.
Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday.
Brown.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night:
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear.
Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-souls day is my body's doomsday.
Shaksp.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. n. f. [doomsday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

The Danes also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomsday-book.
Camden.

DOOR. n. f. [don, dupe, Saxon; dorris, Erse.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses, and gates of cities or public buildings; except in the licence of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free will open flew.
Fairy Q.
In the side, a door
Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

To the same end men sev'ral paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead.
Denham.
For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in.
Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a house: often in the plural, doors.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air, and another of the same kind and bigness within doors.
Bacon's Natural History.

Let him doubt whether his cloaths be warm,
and so go naked; whether his house be firm,
and live without doors.
Decay of Piety.

Martin's office is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel.
Arbutnot.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors,
and never saw the actions of their own species, push at those who approach them with their fore-heads.
Addison's Spectator.

The sultan entered again the peasant's house,
and turned the owner out of doors.
Addison.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grass appear;
And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear, Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year.
Dryden.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security.
Hammond.

5. Out of Door, or DOORS. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee
now,

With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To servile duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door.
Dryden's Persius.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother.
Locke.

6. At the Door of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door.
Dryden.

7. Next Door to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

A seditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult.
L'Estrange.

DOORCASE. n. f. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is enclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces.
Moxon.

DOORKEEPER. n. f. [door and keeper.]

Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistances to thee, desires to be even a door-keeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants.

Taylor's Preface.

DOQUET. n. f. A paper containing a warrant.

Before the institution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased without an oath.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.

DO'RMAN. adj. [dormant, French.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can insure his anger is dormant; or, should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top.

With this radius he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, till it swims within his reach.
Grew's Museum.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant.
Brown.

3. Private; not publick.

There were other dormant musters of soldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together.
Bacon.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions.
Swift.

5. Leaning; not perpendicular.

Old dormant windows must confess
Her beams: their glimmering spectacles,
Struck with the splendor of her face,
Do th' office of a burning glass.
Cleaveland.

DO'RMITORY. n. f. [dormitorium, Lat.]

1. A place to sleep in: used commonly for a room with many beds.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories.
Mortimer.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,
And Jones and Boyle's united labours fall.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. A burial place.

The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cæmeteria, and in English dormitories.
Ayliffe's Peregrin.

DO'RMOUSE. n. f. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.] A small animal which passes a large part of the winter in sleep.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,
A little less than dead: more dulness hangs
On us than on the moon.
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused.
Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. f. [from dorn, German, a thorn.] A fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shell-fish, as scallops and sheath-fish; and flat, as turbot, dorns, and holybut.
Carew.

DO'RNIC. n. f. [of Deornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table.

To DORR. v. a. [tor, stupid, Teuto-nick.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner.

DORR. n. f. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vaginipennous, or sheath-winged, as beetles and dorrs.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The dorr or hedge-chaffer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this, and his eyes, black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shell spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chestnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair. Grew's Museum.

Do'RSEL. } n. f. [from dorsum, the back.]

Do'RSER. } A pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burden, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written, doffel.

DORSI'FEROUS. } adj. [dorsum, and fero,

DORSI'PAROUS. } or pario, Latin.] Having the property of bearing, or bringing forth, on the back. It is used of plants that have the seed on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

Do'RTURE. n. f. [contracted from dormiture; dormitura, Latin; dortoir, Fr.] A dormitory; a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat. Bacon.

DOSE. n. f. [δοσις.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vig'rous dose too fiercely wrought, And added fury to the strength it brought. Dryden's Virgil.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose. Arbutnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignoramus in power and place that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that, as fullsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down. South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot. Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into The world, but he has done his dose; Married his punctual dose of wives, Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives. Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose; that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines. Derham.

2. To give physick, or any thing nauseous, to any man: in a ludicrous sense.

Do'SSIL. n. f. [corrupted from dorsel, something laid upon the part.] A pledget; a nodule or lump of lint to be laid on a fore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a doffil. Wifeman.

DoST. The second person of do.

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow? Addison's Cato.

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg; and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. a. To mark with specks.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

Do'TAGE. n. f. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence; Though too much moisture in an infant's brain, And too much driness in an old man's sense, Cannot the prints of outward things retain: Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit; And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts As joyful as our hearts: Out senses tell us, if we please not them, Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn, Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

Do'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess, My people thin, my wretched country waste, An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne, Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own? Garth's Ovid.

Do'TARD. n. f. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood, called in some provinces a twitchild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise, Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail, And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise, Else never should thy judgment be so frail. Fairy Queen.

The sickly dotard wants a wife, To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.

DoTA'TION. n. f. [dotatio, Latin.] The act of giving a dowry or portion. Diſt.

To DOTE. v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, French.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote, I see my son. Shaksp. Comedy of Errors. A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jen.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell: Go, be the temple and the gods your care; Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryden's Æneid.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shakspere.

3. To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on, And blest'd, and grac'd. Shaksp. Henry IV. Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee, Because thou seest me dote upon my love. Shakspere.

All the beauties of the court besides Are mad in love, and dote upon your person. Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power, And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth, Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire, As not to entertain a nobler fire? Dryden.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death all eloquent! you only prove What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

Do'TED. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid. Not used.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance The prince had marked well. Spenser.

Do'TER. n. f. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt, It mourns that painting and usurping air Should ravish doters with a false aspect; And therefore is she born to make black fair. Shakspere.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

Do'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd, Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid? Dryden's Juvenal.

Do'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

Do'TTEREL. n. f. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DOUBLE. adj. [double, Fr. duplex, Lat. duple, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclesi.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but on whom They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads: His cares must still be double to his joys In any dignity. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers, by neglecting, and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Natural History.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swoln so high, his double chin Might rest upon 't. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus curst steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd. Dryd.
No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night. Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our fights and sounds would always double be. Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's. Shakspeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I th' presence
He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning. Shakspeare.
Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart. 1 Chronicles.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.]

Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowell.

DOUBLE QUARREL.

Is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official; and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowell.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways: as, double-edged, having an edge on each side: or for twice the number or quantity; as, double-died, twice died.

Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians.
Dryden.

You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know Their power to knead, and give the form to dough. King.

VOL. I.

2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.
Shakspeare.

DOUGHBAKED. adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection;
soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.
Donne.

DOUGHTY. adj. [dohtig, Saxon; deught, virtue, Dut.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent;
used of men and things.

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue.
Shakspeare.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakspeare.

DO'WDY. n. f. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipfy; Helen and Hero, slidings and harlots. Shakspeare.

The bedlam train of lovers use
T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

DO'WDY. adj. Awkward.

No housewifery the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confes'd the threw.

will give according as you shall say unto me;
but give me the damsel to wife. Genesys.

4. Endowment; gift.

What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire,
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Dost thou within this dying flesh inspire!
Davies.

DO'WERED. adj. [from dower.] Portion-ed; supplied with a portion.

Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new adapted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our
oath,

Take her, or leave her? Shakspeare's King Lear.

DO'WERLESS. adj. [from dower.] Wanting a fortune; unportioned.

Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,

Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France.

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Wotton.

Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness: and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint.
Donne.

We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham.

A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southern.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down, began to shade his face.
Dryden.

On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.
Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seed.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air. Bacon's Natural History.

Like scatter'd down, by howling Eurus blown
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown.

reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

To fall, that's justice ;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish.

Dryden.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn ;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down.

Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.

Dryden.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon.

DRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on nooks.

Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook or otherwise. Walton.

DRAUGH. n. f. [corruptly written for draff.] Refuse; swill. See DRAFF.

We do not act, that often jest and laugh:
'Tis old, but true, still swine eat all the draught.
Shakspeare.

DRAUGHT. n. f. [from draw.]

1. The act of drinking.

They slung up one of their hogheads, and I drank it off at a draught; which I might well do, for it did not hold half a pint. Gulliver's Trav.

2. A quantity of liquor drank at once.

He had once continued about nine days without drink; and he might have continued longer, if, by distempering himself one night with hard study, he had not had some inclination to take a small draught. Boyle.

Fill high the goblets with the sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god.
Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;
He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave.
Dryden's Æneid.

I have cured some very desperate coughs by a draught every morning of spring water, with a handful of sage boiled in it. Temple.

Every draught, to him that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature; a provision for rheum and diseases. South.

3. Liquor drank for pleasure.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

Number'd ills, that lie unseen
In the pernicious draught: the word obscene,
Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable; the too prompt reply. Prior.

Delicious wines th' attending herald brought;
The gold gave lustre to the purple draught.
Pope's Odyssey.

4. The act of drawing or pulling carriages.

A general custom of using oxen for all sorts of draughts, would be perhaps the greatest improvement. Temple.

The most occasion that farmers have, is for draught horses. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Draw the water for the siege. Nath.

5. To suck.

He hath drawn thee dry. Eccles.

There was no war, no dearth, no stop of trade or commerce; it was only the crown which had sucked too hard, and now being full, upon the head of a young king, was like to draw less. Bacon's Henry VII.

Sucking and drawing the breast dischargeth the milk as fast as it can be generated. Wiseman.

6. To attract; to call toward itself.

We see that salt, laid to a cut finger, healeth it; so as it seemeth salt draweth blood, as well as blood draweth salt. Bacon.

Majesty in an eclipse, like the sun, draws eyes that would not have looked towards it if it had shined out. Suckling.

He affected a habit different from that of the times, such as men had only beheld in pictures, which drew the eyes of most, and the reverence of many, towards him. Clarendon.

7. To draw as the magnet does.

She had all magnetic force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resoluteest breast,
As the magnetic hardest iron draws. Milton.

All eyes you draw, and with the eyes the heart;
Of your own pomp yourself the greatest part. Dryden.

8. To inhale.

Thus I call'd, and stray'd I know not whither,
From where I first drew air, and first beheld
This happy light. Milton's Paradise Lost.

While near the Lucrine lake, consum'd to death,
I draw the sultry air, and gasp for breath,
You taste the cooling breeze. Addison on Italy

Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer breath,
When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death? Pope.

9. To take from any thing containing or holding.

They drew out the staves of the ark. 2 Chron.

The joiner puts boards into ovens after the batch is drawn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

15. To unclose or slide back curtains.

Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince. Shakspeare.

Alarm'd, and with presaging heart he came,
And drew the curtains, and expos'd the dame. Dryden.

Shouts, cries, and groans first pierce my ears,
and then
A flash of lightning draws the guilty scene,
And shows new arms, and wounds, and dying men. Dryden.

16. To close or spread curtains.

Philoclea intreated Pamela to open her grief;
who drawing the curtain, that the candle might not complain of her blushing, was ready to speak. Sidney.

17. To extract.

Herbs draw a weak juice, and have a soft stalk. Bacon.

Spirits, by distillations, may be drawn out of vegetable juices, which shall flame and fume of themselves. Cheyne.

18. To procure, as an agent cause.

When he finds the hardship of slavery outweigh the value of life, 'tis in his power, by resisting his master, to draw on himself death. Locke.

19. To produce, or bring, as an efficient cause.

When the fountain of mankind
Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin,
This was a charge that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Sir John Davies.

Religion will requite all the honour we can do it, by the blessings it will draw down upon us. Tillotson.

Our voluntary actions are the precedent causes of good and evil, which they draw after them, and bring upon us. Locke.

What would a man value land ready cultivated, and well stocked, where he had no hopes of commerce with other parts of the world, to draw money to him by the sale of the product? Locke.

Those elucidations have given rise or increase to his doubts, and drawn obscurity upon places of scripture. Locke.

His sword ne'er fell but on the guilty head;
Oppression, tyranny, and pow'r usurp'd,
Draw all the vengeance of his arm upon 'em.
Addison.

20. To convey secretly or gradually.

The liars in wait draw themselves along.
Judges.

In process of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselves more westerly towards the Red Sea.
Raleigh.

21. To protract; to lengthen; to spin.

How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden!
How long her face is drawn! how pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold.
Shakspeare.

Hear himself repine
At Fate's unequal laws; and at the clue
Which merciless in length the midmost filter drew.
Dryden's Juvenal.

If we shall meet again with more delight,
Then draw my life in length; let me sustain,
In hopes of his embrace, the worst of pain.
Dryden's Aeneid.

In some similes, men draw their comparisons into minute particulars of no importance.
Felton on the Clafficks.

22. To utter lingeringly.

The brand, amid the flaming fuel thrown,
Or drew, or seem'd to draw, a dying groan.
Dryden's Fables.

23. To represent by picture, or in fancy.

I do arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.
Shakspeare.
With his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Draw the whole world expecting who should reign,
After this combat, o'er the conquer'd main.
Waller.

From the soft assaults of love
Poets and painters never are secure:
Can I, untouch'd, the fair one's passions move,
Or thou draw beauty, and not feel its pow'r?
Prior.

24. To form a representative image.

The emperor one day took up a pencil which fell from the hand of Titian, who was then drawing his picture; and, upon the compliment which Titian made him on that occasion, he said, Titian deserves to be served by Cæsar.
Dryden.

25. To derive; to have from some original cause or donor.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign?
Dryden.
Several wits entered into commerce with the Egyptians, and from them drew the rudiments of sciences.
Temple.

26. To deduce, as from postulates.

From the events and revolutions of these governments, are drawn the usual instructions of princes and statesmen.
Temple.

27. To imply; to produce as a consequential inference.

What shews the force of the inference but a view of all the intermediate ideas that draw in the conclusion, or proposition inferred?
Locke.

28. To allure; to entice.

I'll raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion.
Shakspeare.
We have drawn them from the city.
Jos.

Draw me not away with the wicked.
Psalms.
Having the art, by empty promises and threats, to draw others to his purpose.
Hayward.

The Spaniards, that were in the town, had so good memories of their losses, in their former fallies, as the confidence of an army, which came for their deliverance, could not draw them forth again.
Bacon's War with Spain.

29. To lead, as a motive.

Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about. — Shakspeare.
Æneas wond'ring stood, then ask'd the cause
Which to the stream the crowding people draws.
Dryden.

30. To persuade to follow.

I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world
To outlook conquest.
Shakspeare.

The poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick, for the time, doth change his nature.
Shakspeare.

31. To induce; to persuade.

The English lords did ally themselves with the Irish, and drew them in to dwell among them,
and gave their children to be fostered by them.
Davies.

Their beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter their imitation than discourses.
Locke.

32. To win; to gain: a metaphor from gaming.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me
That which my father loses.
Shakspeare.

33. To receive; to take up: as, to draw money from the funds.

For thy three thousand ducats here is six. —
—If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond.
Shakspeare.

34. To extort; to force.

So sad an object, and so well express'd,
Drew sighs and groans from the griev'd hero's breast.
Dryden.

Can you e'er forget
The fond embraces, and repeated blessings,
Which you drew from him in your last farewell?
Addison.

35. To wrest; to distort.

I wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the scriptures to your fantasies and affections.
Whitgift.

36. To compose; to form in writing: used of formulary or juridical writings.

In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants.
Shakspeare.
Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shakspeare.

The report is not unartfully drawn, in the spirit of a pleader who can find the most plausible topicks.
Swift.

Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill?
Pope.

37. To withdraw from judicial notice.

Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action:
come, thou must not be in this humour with me.
Shakspeare.

38. To eviscerate; to embowel.

In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe,
And from your cels their slimy substance wipe.
King.

39. To DRAW in. To apply to any purpose by distortion or violence.

A dispute, where every little straw is laid hold on, and every thing that can but be drawn in any way, to give colour to the argument, is advanced with ostentation.
Locke.

40. To DRAW in. To contract; to pull back.

Now, sporting muse, draw in the flowing reins;
Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains.
Gay.

41. To DRAW in. To inveigle; to entice.

Have they invented tones to win
The women, and make them draw in
The men, as Indians with a female Tame elephant inveigle the male?
Hudibras.
It was the prostitute faith of faithless miscreants that drew them in, and deceived them.
South.

42. To DRAW off. To extract by distillation.

Authors, who have thus drawn off the spirits of their thoughts, should lie still for some time, till their minds have gathered fresh strength, and by reading, reflection, and conversation, laid in a new stock of elegancies, sentiments, and images of nature.
Addison's Freeholder.

43. To DRAW off. To drain out by a vent.

Stop your vessel, and have a little vent-hole stopped with a spill, which never allow to be pulled out till you draw off a great quantity.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

44. To DRAW off. To withdraw; to abstract.

It draws men's minds off from the bitterness of party.
Addison.

45. To DRAW on. To occasion; to invite.

Under colour of war, which either his negligence drew on, or his practices procured, he levied a subsidy.
Hayward.

46. To DRAW on. To cause; to bring by degrees.

The examination of the subtle matter would draw on the consideration of the nice controversies that perplex philosophers.
Boyle on Fluids.

47. To DRAW over. To raise in a still.

I took rectified oil of vitriol, and by degrees mixed with it essential oil of wormwood, drawn over with water in a limbeck.
Boyle on Colours.

48. To DRAW over. To persuade to revolt; to induce to change a party.

Some might be brought into his interests by money, others drawn over by fear.
Addison.
One of differing sentiments would have drawn Luther over to his party.
Atterbury.

49. To DRAW out. To protract; to lengthen.

He must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance.
Shakspeare.

50. To DRAW out. To beat out, as is done to hot iron.

Batter a piece of iron out, or, as workmen
call it, draw it out, till it comes to its breadth.
Moxon.

Virgil has drawn out the rules of tillage and planting into two books, which Hesiod has dispatched in half a one.
Addison.

51. To DRAW out. To extract; to pump out by insinuation.

Philoclea found her, and, to draw out more,
said she, I have often wondered how such excellencies could be.
Sidney.

52. To DRAW out. To induce by motive.

Whereas it is concluded, that the retaining diverse things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: What needed this wrest to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches?
Hooker.

53. To DRAW out. To call to action; to detach for service; to range.

Draw out a file, pick man by man,
Such who dare die, and dear will sell their death.
Dryden.

Next of his men and ships he makes review,
Draws out the best and ablest of the crew.
Dryden's Aeneid.

54. To DRAW out. To range in battle.

Let him desire his superior officer, that, the next time he is drawn out, the challenger may be posted near him.
Collins.

DRA

They should keep a watch upon the particular bias in their minds, that it may not draw too much. Addison's Spectator.

3. To contract; to shrink.

I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself, by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon.

4. To advance; to move; to make progression any way.

You were, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: Oh, omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose. Shakspeare.

Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people. I Samuel.

He ended; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man Clad to meet man. Milton's Par. Lost.

They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryden.

Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the surly boatmen saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood. Dryden.

And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh,
In all the pride of blooming youth I die. Addison's Ovid.

5. To draw together; to be collected; to come together.

They muster there, and round the centre swarm,

And draw together in a globose form. Blackmore.

For his sake

Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset. Shakspeare.

7. To practise the art of delineation.

So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper, any thing he sees, should be got. Locke.

8. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.

He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.

9. To make a fore run by attraction.

10. To DRAW off. To retire; to retreat.

When the engagement proves unlucky, the way is to draw off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Collier.

11. To DRAW on. To advance; to approach.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall. Dryden.

12. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.

DRA

The lord Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large field opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

13. To DRAW retains, through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action gradual or continuous, and leisurely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.

DRAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing.

2. The lot or chance drawn.

DRAWBACK. n. f. [draw and back.]

Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.

In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent; Whatever they give me, I must be content. Swift.

DRAWBRIDGE. n. f. [draw and bridge.]

A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.

Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge. Carew.

DRAWER. n. f. [from draw.]

1. One employed in procuring water from the well.

From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water. Deuteronomy.

2. One whose business is to draw liquors from the cask.

Stand in some bye room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Let the drawers be ready with wine and fresh glasses;

Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be tied. Ben Jonson.

A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers abroad and his footmen at home, know he is not to be provoked. Tatler.

3. That which has the power of attraction.

Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a great drawer. Swift.

4. A box in a case, out of which it is drawn at pleasure.

There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a worm, shut up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the senses or understanding of a man. Locke.

We will suppose the China dishes taken off, and a drawer of medals supplying their room. Addison on Medals.

5. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's dress.

The Maktse harden the bodies of their children, by making them go stark naked, without shirt or drawers, till they are ten years old. Locke.

DRAWING. n. f. [from draw.] Delineation; representation.

They random drawings from your sheets shall take,

And of one beauty many blunders make. Pope.

DRAWINGROOM. n. f. [from draw and room.]

1. The room in which company assembles at court.

DRE

What you heard of the words spoken of you in the drawing-room was not true: the sayings of princes are generally as ill related as the sayings of wits. Pope.

2. The company assembled there.

DRAWN. part. [from draw.]

An army was drawn together of near six thousand horse. Clarendon.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn must put the shaft below. Dryden's Fables.

1. Equal; where each party takes his own stake.

If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British heart must tremble. Addison.

2. With a sword drawn.

What, art thou drawn among those heartless hinds? Shakspeare.

3. Open; put aside, or unclosed.

A curtain drawn presented to our view
A town besieged. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

4. Eviscerated.

There is no more faith in thee than in a stoned prune; no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox. Shakspeare.

5. Induced as from some motive.

The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government. Spenser on Ireland.

As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear. Hayward.

DRAWWELL. n. f. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.

The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a pitcher with a handcord, for as much water as they could easily pull up. Grew.

To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow, driveling way.

Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope.

DRAY. n. f. [Draeg, Saxon.]

DRAYCART. n. f. The car on which beer is carried.

Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison.

When drays bound high, then never crows behind,

Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

DRA'YHORSE. n. f. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.

This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler.

DRA'YMAN. n. f. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,

And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shakspeare.

Have not coblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern? South.

DRA'YPLOUGH. n. f. [dray and plough.]

A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for miry clays. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from droffel, the scum or dross of human nature; or from droflesse, French, a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses witches,

To be their cully for a space,

That, when the time's expired, the drazels

For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. f. [Draeb, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terror; affright; horror either felt or impressed.

D R E

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatter'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shaksp.
Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job.
Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.
If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terror of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Genesis.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.

Let him be your dread. Isaiah.
To thee of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our foster king. Prior.

DREAD. adj. [dræð, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shaksp.
It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him:
So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim.
Shaksp.
To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder.
Shaksp.

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd.
Milton.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n, Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost.
From this descent
Celestial virtues rising, will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall.
Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase, dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

To DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.

Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut.

DREADER. n. s. [from dread.] One that lives in fear.

I have suspended much of my pity towards the great dreaders of popery. Swift.

DREADFUL. adj. [dræd and full.]

1. Terrible; frightful; formidable.

The rigid interdiction which resounds
Yet dreadful in mine ear. Milton.
The still night,
Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville.

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place! Genesis.

DREADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself, can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews.
Dryden.

D R E

DREADFULNESS. n. s. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terror to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DREADLESSNESS. n. s. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmaño, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DREADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unafrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terror.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen.
All night the dreadless angel, unpursued,
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton.

DREAM. n. s. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Merie Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρεμα τὸ βίε, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Σκηνὴ πᾶς ὁ βίος καὶ παύσιμος ἢ μάδε
παύσιμος,

Τὴν σπῆδὴν μεταδίδς, ἢ φέρε τὰς ὀδύνας.
Anthol.]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams.
That shake us nightly. Shaksp.
In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryd.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shaksp.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped; not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.
I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shaksp.

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shaksp.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak.
He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet.
He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
Dryden.

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.

D R E

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden.

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryd.
At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future fight, and early rose.
Dryden.

DREAMER. n. s. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryd.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shaksp.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reverie.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer.
Prior.

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DREAMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden's Remains.

DREAR. n. s. Dread; terror.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night raven, trump of doleful dear.
Spenser.

DREAR. adj. [dreorig, Saxon, dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A dear and dying sound
Affrights the flamins at their service quaint.
Milton.

DREARIHEAD. n. s. [from dreary.] Horror; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhed,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearihead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser.

DREARIMENT. n. s. [from dreary.] This word is now obsolete.

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser's Epithalamium.

2. Horror; dread; terror.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldring dreariment.
Fairy Queen.

DREARY. adj. [dreorig, Saxon.] This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary thricks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul.
Fairy Queen.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.

Towns, forests, herds, and men promiscuous drown'd,
With one great death deform the dreary ground.

Prior.

DREDGE. n. f. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spalls of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom.

Carew.

To DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne find a welcome acceptance.

Carew.

DREGGISH. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they sling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong.

Harvey on Consumptions.

DREGGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame, Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit.

Blackmore.

Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out.

Boyle.

DREGS. n. f. [Drehtzen, Saxon; dreggian, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame.
They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.

Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.

Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.

Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him.

Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd

Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind.

Dryden.

What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure.

Rogers.

To DRAIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill a-going, and I can drain her of them all.

Congreve.

'Tis drain'd and emptied of its poison now;

A cordial draught.

Southern.

To DRENCH. v. a. [Drencan, Saxon.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses.

Shakspeare.

To dry deep thoughts learn with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws.

Milton.

VOL. I.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.

Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death.

Shakspeare.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd

Our swords in native blood.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend.

Milton.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form.

Farrier's Dictionary.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after.

Shakspeare.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.

Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it.

King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force.

Diab.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see

In danger rather to be drent than brent?

Fairy Queen.

To DRESS. v. a. [dresse, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the fun, or where they look beautifully; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery.

Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.

Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dress'd out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence.

Arbutnot.

Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

6. To break or teach a horse: a term of horsemanship.

A steed

Well mouth'd, well manag'd, which himself did dress;

His aid in war, his ornament in peace.

Dryden.

7. To rectify; to adjust.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flower.

Milton.

Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,

New soil to make, and meliorate the rest.

Dryden.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil instead of bark.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incense.

Exodus.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or spijs.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress
For his fat grandfire some delicious melf,
In feeding high his tutor will surpass,
An heir apparent of the gourmand race.

Dryden.

DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laugh'd at in our forefathers wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity they are brought about, we think becoming.

Government of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by fates and furies worn alone.

Pope's Statius.

His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.

Addison.

To DRIB. v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains drips a part.

Dryden.

To DRIBBLE. v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, dripple, dribble, thence drivel and driveller. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it.

Woodward on Fossils.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder. Arbuthnot.

2. To fall weakly and slowly.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way.

South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift.

Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin.

Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready racers stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky.

Pope's Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Shakspeare.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works.

Hooker.

Their drift 'comes known and they discover'd are;

For some, of many, will be false of course.

Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody.

Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels.

Addison.

This, by the stile, the manner, and the drift, 'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift.

Swift.

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow, no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every plain.

Ellis' Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

He wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more astray, Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps.

Thomson.

To DRILL. v. a. [drillen, Dutch; drilian, Sax. from drugh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whacum by my side lay kill'd. Hudibras.
Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes?

Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drillbow in the right hand; but, when they turn small work, they hold the drill-bow in their left hand.

Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off: in low phrase; corrupted, I believe, from drawled.

She has bubbled him out of his youth: she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age.

Addison.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another, by the same arts they corrupt and squeeze him.

South.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise.

Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field.

Hudibras.

Thy flaming chariot-wheels that shook Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drov'st of warring angels disarray'd.
Milton.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these, as the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit.
Brown.

We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at.
Locke.

They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another.
Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at.
Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

6. To drive in all its senses, whether active or neuter, may be observed to retain a sense compounded of violence and progression.

To DRIVEL. v. n. [from drip, drip, dribble, drivel.]

1. To slaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard.

I met with this Chremes, a driveling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands,
already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth.
Sidney.

No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytick, or a fool.
Grew.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.

This driveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow fotted, Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey, by
love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance.
Dryden.

DRIVEL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth.

Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth, and eyes.
Dryden.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use.

What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts!
Sidney.

Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives, While still more wretch, more wicked, he doth prove.
Sidney.

DRIVELLER. n. f. [from drivel.] A fool;
an idiot; a slaverer.

I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgment.

He from the many-peopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the drivers cries.
Sandys.

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death.
L'Estrange.

The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to.
South.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends.
Dryden's Virgil.

To DRIZZLE. v. a. [drifelen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small flow drops, as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew.
Shakespeare.

Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory.
Shakespeare.

To DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short flow drops.

And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear.
Spenser.

Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.
Fairy Queen.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
Milton.

The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts.
Addison on Italy.

DRIZZLY. adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun.
Dryden's Virgil.

DROIL. n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.] A drone; a slug-gard.

To DROIL. v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live without entoye.
Spenser.

Desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets.
Government of the Tongue.

DROLL. n. f. [droler, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way.
L'Estrange.

Why, how now, Andrew? cries his brother
droll;
To-day's conceit, methinks, is something dull.
Prior.

Democritus, dear droll! revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth.
Prior.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls.
Swift.

To DROLL. v. n. [drôle, French.] To jest;
to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries, used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous.
Glauville.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses,
may yet be laughed or drolled into them.
L'Estrange.

Let virtuosos insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature.
Stout.

DROLLERY. n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes;
buffoonery.

They hang between heav'n and hell, borrow the christians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it.
Government of the Tongue.

DROMEDARY. n. f. [dromedare, Italian.]

A sort of camel, so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a-day.

Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble; and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser,
with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue.
Their hair is soft and shorn: they have no fangs and foreteeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. See CAMEL.
Calmet.

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place.
1 Kings.

Mules, after these camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war.
Milton.

DRONE. n. f. [brouen, Saxon.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone.
Shakespeare's Henry V.

Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.
Dryden's Aurengzeb.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him.
Shakespeare.

Sit idle on the household hearth,
A burd'nous drone, to visitants a gaze.
Milton.
It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock.
Addison.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines.
Chapman.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers fault!
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long relative race of droning kings?
Dryden.

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melfoil and honeysuckles pound,
With these alluring favours strew the ground,
And mix with tinkling brags the cymbal's droning sound.
Dryden.

DRO'NISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent;
unactive.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient hives again.
Rowe.

To DROOP. v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself. Shak.

I droop, with struggling spent;
My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Shakspeare's Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowie, While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shakspeare.

When by impulse from heav'n Tyrtæus sung,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung.
Roscommon.

Can flow'rs but droop in absence of the sun Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop.
Dryden.

When furious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the court of love,
The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts.
Dryden.

I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage
With love of freedom and contempt of life.
Addison's Cato.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to droop and languish.
Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downward: commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray, Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd

Laborious, till day droop. Milton's Par. Lost.

His head, though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold, Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton's Par. Lost

On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which with a sigh she rais'd, and this she said.
Pope.

DROP. n. f. [dnoppa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the med'cine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine, being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade
Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden's Span. Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Lat.]

A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's Par. Lost.

And drop their anchors on the meads below.
Dryden.

One only hag remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an awkward court'ry to the knight.
Dryden.

See. John himself will scarce forbear
To bite his pen and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shakspeare.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes. Watts' Legick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.
Amos.

5. To insert indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour,
they suddenly drop the pursuit. Sharp's Surgery.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me if I drop you here. L'Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without further association.

She drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages; and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish.
Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots. Variis stellatus corpora guttis.

Or sporting, with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milton.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heav'n
Upon the place beneath. Shakspeare.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God.
Psalms.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden's Æneid.

Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone.
Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Gulliver's Trav.

In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Cheyne.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So mayst thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your presumptuous,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.
Shakspeare.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us.
Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison's Travels.

I heard of threats occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found,
and so it dropped. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.

Either you come not here, or, as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Careless and quailish, with a yawning face.
Dryden.

He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry: and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator.

9. To fall short of a mark.

Often it drops or overshoots by the disproportions of distance or application. Collier.

DROPPING. n. f. [from drop.]

1. That which falls in drops.

Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles. Donne.

2. That which drops when the continuous stream ceases.

Strain out the last dull droppings of your sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence. Pope.

DROPLET. n. f. A little drop.

Thou abhor'd'st in us our human griefs, Scorn'd our brine's flow, and those our droplets which

From niggard nature fall. Shakspeare.

DROPTONE. n. f. [drop and stone.] Spar-formed into the shape of drops. Woodw.

DROPPWORT. n. f. [drop and wort.] A plant of various species.

DROPSICAL. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy; hydropical; tending to a dropsy.

The diet of nephritick and dropsical persons ought to be such as is opposite to, and subdueth, the alkalescent nature of the salts in the serum of the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DROPSIED. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy.

Where great addition swells, and virtue none,
It is a dropsied honour: good alone
Is good. Shakspeare's All's well that ends well.

DROPSY. n. f. [hydrops, Latin; whence anciently hydropisy, thence dropisy, dropsy.] A collection of water in the body, from too lax a tone of the solids, whereby digestion is weakened, and all the parts stuffed. Quincy.

An anasarca, a species of dropsy, is an extra-vasation of water lodged in the cells of the mem-

DROSS. n. f. [dnor, Saxon.]

1. The recement or despumation of metals.

Some scumm'd the dross that from the metals came,

Some stirr'd the molten ore with ladles great,
And every one did twink, and every one did sweat. Spenser.

Should the mixture of a little drofs constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgment, to make separation of the one from the other?

Hooker.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.

An emperor, hid under a crust of drofs, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful.

Addison.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dregs; feculence; corruption.

Fair proud, now tell me why should fair be proud,

Sith all world's glory is but drofs unclean;

And in the shade of death itself shall shroud, However now thereof ye little ween?

Spenser.

That most divine light only shineth on those minds which are purged from all worldly drofs and human uncleanness.

Raleigh.

All treasures and all gain esteem as drofs,

And dignities and pow'rs, all but the highest.

Milton.

Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the drofs and filth of sensual delights.

Tillotson.

DRO'SSINESS. n. f. [from droffy.] Foulness; feculence; rust.

The furnace of affliction refines us from earthly droffiness, and softens us for the impression of God's stamp.

Boyle.

DRO'SSY. adj. [from drofs.]

1. Full of scorious or recrementitious parts; full of drofs.

So doth the fire the droffy gold refine.

Davies.

For, by the fire, they emit not only many droffy and scorious parts, but whatsoever they had received either from earth or loadstone.

Brown.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.

Your intention hold,

As fire these droffy rhymes to purify,

Or as elixir to change them into gold.

Donne.

DRO'TCHEL. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from dretchel. To dretch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay.] An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used.

DROVE. n. f. [from drive.]

1. A body or number of cattle: generally used of oxen or black-cattle.

They brought to their stations many droves of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons.

Hayward.

A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern droves.

Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drove, but a flock, of sheep.

A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to.

South.

3. Any collection of animals.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove, Now to the moon in wavering morrice move.

Milton.

4. A crowd; a tumult.

But if to fame alone thou dost pretend, The miser will his empty palace lend, Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass, Where droves, as at a city-gate, may pass.

Dryden's Juvenal.

DRO'VEN. part. from drive. Not now used.

This is fought indeed;

Had we so done at first, we had droven them home

With clouts about their heads.

Shakspeare.

DRO'VER. n. f. [from drove.] One that fays oxen for sale, and drives them to market.

The prince hath got your hero.

—I wish him joy of her.

—Why, that's spoken like an honest drower; so they sell bullocks.

Shakspeare.

The drower who his fellow drower meets

In narrow passages of winding streets.

Dryden.

DROUGHT. n. f. [drugode, Saxon.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.

O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain Than youthful April shall with all his showers: In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still.

Shakspeare.

Great droughts in summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent summer the year following.

Bacon.

To south the Persian bay,

And inaccessible th' Arabian drought.

Milton.

As torrents in the drowth of summer fail,

So perish'd man from death shall never rise.

Sandys.

They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues.

Temple.

In a drought, the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain.

Dryden.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and land-snails innumerable come out of their lurking-places.

Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcase, pinn'd with hunger and with drought.

Milton.

One, whose drought

Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream, Whose liquid murmur heard new thirst excites.

Milton.

DROUGHTINESS. n. f. [from droughty.]

The state of wanting rain.

DROUGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.

That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design.

Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.

If the former years

Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must

With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat.

Philips.

To DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below, German, Skinner; from druncnian, Sax. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.

They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream.

King Charles.

When of God's image only eight he found Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd.

Prior.

2. To overwhelm in water.

Or so much as it needs

To dew the sovereign flow'r, and drown the weeds.

Shakspeare.

Galleys might be drowned in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged.

Knolles' History.

3. To overflow; to bury in an inundation; to deluge.

Between the prince and parliament we stand,

The barriers of the state on either hand:

May neither overflow, for then they drown the land.

Dryden.

4. To immerge; to lose in any thing.

Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd, It seems their souls but in their senses are.

Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.

Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drowned in another man's praise.

Spenser on Ireland.

That the brightness of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular error.

Wotton.

My private voice is drown'd amid the senate.

Addison.

Some aged man who lives this act to see, And who in former times remember'd me, May say, the son, in fortitude and fame, Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name.

Dryden.

To DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.

There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning.

Ascham.

Methought what pain it was to drown!

What dreadful noise of waters in my ears!

Shakspeare.

To DROWSE. v. a. [droofen, Dutch.]

To make heavy with sleep.

There gentle sleep

First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd

My drowfied senses uncontroll'd.

Milton.

To DROWSE. v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.

All their shape

Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse, Charm'd with Arcadian pipe.

Milton.

2. To look heavy, not cheerful.

They rather drows'd, and hung their eyelids down,

Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect

As cloudy men use to their adversaries.

Shaksp.

DRO'WSIED. n. f. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.

The royal virgin shook off drowsied;

And rising forth out of her baser bower,

Look'd for her knight.

Fairy Queen.

DRO'WSILY. adv. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.

The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities, Which drowsily like humming beetles rise.

Dryden.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.

We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down.

Raleigh.

DRO'WSINESS. n. f. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.

What a strange drowsiness possesses them!

Shakspeare.

In deep of night, when drowsiness

Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I

To the celestial fyren's harmony.

Milton.

What succour can I hope the muse will send, Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend?

Crashaw.

He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses.

South.

He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed.

Locke.

A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people.

Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.

It falleth out well to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war.

Bacon.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.

Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep.

Sidney.

Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch.

Bacon's Natural History.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,

Start and raise up their drowsy heads.

Cleaveland.

Drunken at last, and drowsy they depart
Each to his house. Dryden.
2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight, Uprose from drowsy couch. Fairy Queen.
While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow fray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid.
Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.
Those inadvertencies, a body would think,
even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

To DRUB. v. a. [druber, to kill, Dan.]
To thrash; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.
He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by 't.
Hudibras.

The little thief had been soundly drubbed with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.
Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed.
Locke.

DRUB. n. f. [from the verb] A thump;
a knock; a blow.

The blows and drubs I have receiv'd
Have bruise'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.
By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and contusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE. v. n. [dreccan, to vex, Saxon; dragen, to carry, Dutch.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.

And to crack'd fiddle, and hoarse tabour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.
The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning, Midst winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day.
Otway.

Advantages obtained by industry, directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.

Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.
Dryden.

I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.
What is an age, in dull renown drugg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Glanville.

DRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.

To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, Shakspeare.

He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton.

Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton's Agonistes.

He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.
The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame, and sorrow, and misery.
Tillotson.

DRU'DGER. n. f. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.
2. The drudgingbox; the box out of which flower is thrown on roast meat.
Ditt.

DRU'DGERY. n. f. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery. Shakspeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders, as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries
Which they impose. Southern's Oroonoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live.
Dryden.

Paradise was a place of blifs, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow.
Locke.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.
It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery. Swift.

DRU'DGINGBOX. n. f. [drudging and box.]
The box out of which flower is sprinkled upon roast meat.
But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudgingbox to be recall'd.
King's Cookery.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.]
Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray.

DRUG. n. f. [drogue, French.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descried
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas! in vain.
Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope.
In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare.
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught
controll;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryd.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from his first swath proceeded
Thro' sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command. Shakspeare.

To DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The forfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores.—I've drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them.
Shakspeare.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, with'd their jaws
With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

DRUGGET. n. f. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

In druggets dress'd, of thirteen pence a-yard,
See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRUGGIST. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's.
Boyle.

DRUGSTER. n. f. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drugster's. Boyle.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. Atterbury.

DRUID. n. f. [derio, oaks, and bud, in-cantation.] A priest and philosopher of the ancient Britons.

DRUM. n. f. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakspeare.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the
ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangour shrill
Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood.
Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

To DRUM. v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

Now, heart,
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell,
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

To DRUMBLE. v. n. To drone; to be sluggish.

Take up these cloaths here quickly: where's the cowlstaff? Look, how you drumbl! carry them to the landress in Datchet Mead. Shakspe.

DRUMFISH. n. f. The name of a fish.

The under-jaw of the drumfish from Virginia.
Woodward.

DRUMMAJOR. n. f. [drum and major.]
The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing;
And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk unruly,
May dwindle to a feeble— Cleaveland.

DRUMMAKER. n. f. [drum and maker.]
He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker.
Mortimer.

DRUMMER. n. f. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.
Shakspeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile.
Gay.

DRU'NSTICK. n. f. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
Then hatten to be drunk, the business of the day.

Dryden.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober.

Spectator.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood.

Deuteronomy.

DRU'NKARD. n. f. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.

Shakspeare.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,

But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them.

Shaks.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off.

South.

DRU'NKEN. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!

Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.

Shaks.

Drunk men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double.

Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.

Shakspeare.

4. Done in a state of inebriation,

When your carvers, or your waiting vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon.

Shakspeare.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake.

Swift.

DRU'NKENLY. adv. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly carous'd.

Shakspeare.

DRU'NKENNESS. n. f. [from drunken.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness.

Taylor's Holy Living.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company.

Watts' on the Mind.

3. Intoxication or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason.

Spenser.

DRY. adj. [dryg, Saxon.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry.

Bacon.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heav'n,
Into one place, and let dry land appear!

Of turbid elements the sport;

From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist.

Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a whole-some summer, if there be a showering April between.

Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season.

Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid:
He shall live a man forbid.

Shakspeare.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring:
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go.

Dryden.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for sway.
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues.

Philips.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice.

Ben Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabrick; a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions: and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.

Watson's Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.

Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.

L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others.

L'Estr.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled.

Burnet's Theory.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament.

Pope.

7. Hard; severe. [drien anciently to endure; dree, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry blow given?

Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet.

Hudibras.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away.

Shakspeare.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy.

Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.

Bacon.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.

Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one

Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes.

Dryden.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries.

Denham.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd life in mourning
Dries up her tears.

Dryden.

4. To scorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

Isaiah.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Rath Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dried an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by iriguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress.

Philips.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally of moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun.

Woodward.

To DRY. v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

DRY'ER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

The ill effects of drinking are relieved by this plant, which is a great dryer and opener, especially by perspiration.

Temple.

DRY'EYED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

Sight so deform what heart of rock could long
Dry-eyed behold? Adam could not, but wept.

Milton.

DRY'LY. adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.
The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection.

Bacon.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves.

Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.

Pope.

DRY'NESS. n. f. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccidity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torriified by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.

Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the innunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible.

Ray on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature?

Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for 't.

Shakspeare.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres.

Arbuthnot.

3. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully.

Ben Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it.

Garth.

4. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit, God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Taylor.

DRY-NURSE. n. f. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.

2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mrs. Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakespeare.

TO DRY-NURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

DRY'SHOD. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command themselves to bear away. Fairy Queen.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DUAL. adj. [dualis, Latin.] Expressing the number two.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other, of the plural. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

TO DUB. v. a. [Subban zo rubebe, Sax. addubba till riddara, Islandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword.]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder. Shakespeare.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubbed, of green, or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record. Camden's Remains.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward on Edward VI.

2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shaksp.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor. Shakespeare.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleveland.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier.

O poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,

That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

These demoniacks let me dub

With the name of legion-club. Swift.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Antis birth. Pope.

DUB. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubbs. Hudib.

DUBIOUSITY. n. f. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. Not used.

Men often swallow falsties for truths, dubiousities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown.

DUBIOUS. adj. [dubius, Latin.]

1. Doubting; not settled in an opinion.

2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.

No quick reply to dubious questions make. Denham.

We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side. Watts' Logic.

3. Not plain; not clear.

Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave, by dubious light. Milton.

4. Having the event uncertain.

His utmost pow'r with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n. Milton.

DUBIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.

Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Almanack makers wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift.

DUBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from dubious.]

Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Broome.

DUBITABLE. adj. [dubito, Latin.]

Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

DUBITATION. n. f. [dubitatio, Latin.]

The act of doubting; doubt.

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see is not what I would see. Grew.

DUCAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke: as, a ducal coronet.

DUCAT. n. f. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver, valued at about four shillings and six pence; in gold, at nine shillings and six pence.

I cannot instantly raise up the grofs
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.

There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.

DUCK. n. f. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]

1. A waterfowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks, that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty mile from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare.

3. A declination of the head; so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play
Till next sunshine holyday:

Here be without duck or nod,

Other trippings to be trod,

Of lighter toes, and such court guise

As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water, so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither crows and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy. Abuthnot and Pope.

TO DUCK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself be ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steep. Fairy Queen.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy. Shakespeare.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare.

TO DUCK. v. a. To put under water.

DUCKER. n. f. [from duck.]

1. A diver.

2. A cringer. Diä.

DUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. [duck and stool.]

A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water.

She in the ducking stool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state. Dorset.

Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the ducking stool more useful. Addison's Freeholder.

DUCKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.]

Short legged.

Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kiss. Dryden.

DUCKLING. n. f. [from duck.] A young duck; the brood of the duck.

Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond,
presently leave her, and in they go. Ray.

Ev'ry morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn. Gay.

DUCKMEAT. n. f. [duck and meat; lens palustris.] A common plant growing in standing waters; duckweed.

TO DUCKO'Y. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the error.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as serpent doth his tongue: with this he duckoys<sup>a</sup> little fishes, and preys upon them. Grew.

DUCKO'Y. n. f. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs, to lead captive silly women, and make them the duckoys to their whole family. Decay of Piety.

DUCKSFOOT. n. f. Black snakeroot, or May-apple.

D U E

DUCKWEED. n. f. [duck and weed.] The same with duckmeat.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thyme leaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon.

DUCT. n. f. [ductus, Latin.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those irony chains which we are born under. Hammond.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison's Spectator.

It was observed that the chyle, in the thoracic duct, retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DUCTILE. adj. [ductilis, Latin.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but, wond'rous to behold!
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread; have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile, of all metals. Dryden.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts infills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Philips.

Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon. Addison.

DUCTILENESS. n. f. [from ductile.]

Flexibility; ductility.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductileness, the application;
The wholesomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free. Donne.

DUCTILITY. n. f. [from ductile.]

1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.

Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for saffron is also yellow, and lead is ductile. Watts' Logick.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.

DUDGEON. n. f. [dolch, German.]

1. A small dagger.

It was a serviceable dudgeon,
Either for fighting or for drudging. Hudibras.

2. Malice; fullness; malignity; ill-will.

Civil dudgeon first grew high
And men fell out they knew not why. Hudib.
The cuckoo took this a little in dudgeon. L'Estrange.

DUE. adj. The part. pass. of owe. [dû, French.]

1. Owed; that any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the public a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon.

Mirth and cheerfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More's Divine Dialogues.

D U E

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.

And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or effected by. Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit, which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on To the Propontick and the Hellespont. Shaksp.

DUE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shaksp.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shaksp.

Thou better know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shaksp.

The due of honour in no point omit.
Shaksp.

I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit and my beauty's due. Dryden.

No popular assembly ever knew, or proposed, or declared, what share of power was their due. Swift.

2. Right; just title.

The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heaven's all-powerful king,
I keep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Whatever custom or law requires to be done.

Befriend
Us, thy vow'd priests, till outmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton.

They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect to the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

TO DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shaksp.

DU'EL. n. f. [duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.

Dream not of your fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have fought:

No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

D U K

TO DU'EL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

He must at length, poor man! die dully at home, when here he might so fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.

The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.

TO DU'EL. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton's Agonistes.

DU'ELLER. n. f. [from duel.] A single combatant.

They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.

DU'ELLIST. n. f. [from duel.]

1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before thy fight. Dryden.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say. Ben Jonson.

DUE'LLLO. n. f. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of duelling.

The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Shaksp.

DUE'NNA. n. f. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could no longer contain; I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbuthnot on Pope.

DUG. n. f. [deggia, to give suck, Islandick.]

1. A pap; a nipple; a teat; spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.

Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which she daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. F. Queen.

They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Raleigh's History.

Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supplied

The infant Jove, and nurs'd his growing pride. Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast, without reproach.

It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears;
With whom, from tender dug of common nurse,
At once I was up brought. Fairy Queen.

As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips. Shak.

DUG. The pret. and part. pass. of dig.

They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison.

DUKE. n. f. [duc, French; dux, Lat.] One of the highest order of nobility in England.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here with him this night. Shaksp.

Aurmarle, Surrey, and Exeter must lose
The names of dukes, their titles, dignities,
And whatsoever profits thereby rise. Daniel's Civil War.

Du'kedom. n. f. [from duke.]

1. The feignory or possessions of a duke.

Her brother found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his duke-
dom

In a poor idle. Shakspeare's Tempest.

The cardinal never resigned his purple for the prospect of giving an heir to the dukedom of Tuscany. Addison.

2. The title or quality of a duke.

Du'lbrained. adj. [dull and brain.]

Stupid; doltish; foolish.

This arm of mine hath chaffis'd
The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham. Shaksp.

Du'lcet. adj. [dulcis, Latin.]

1. Sweet to the taste; luscious.

From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold Wants she fit vessels pure. Milton.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.

I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaksp.

A fabrick huge

Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet. Milton.

Dulcification. n. f. [from dulcify.]

The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltiness, or acri-mony.

In colcothar, the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth: for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle.

To Du'lcify. v. a. [dulcifier, French.]

To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltiness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every flour be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal. Brown.

I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulci-fied tincture of vitriol. Wifeman's Surgery.

Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbuthnot.

Du'lcimer. n. f. [dolcimello, Skinner.]

A musical instrument played by striking the brass wires with little sticks.

Ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick. Daniel.

To Du'lcorate. v. a. [from dulcis,
Latin.]

1. To sweeten.

The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swine's dung above all other dung. Bacon.

2. To make less acrimonious.

Turbith mineral, as it is sold in the shops, is a rough medicine; but, being somewhat dulcorated, first procureth vomiting, and then salivation.
Wifeman's Surgery.

Dulcora'tion. n. f. [from dulcorate.]

The act of sweetening.

Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulco-ration importeth a degree to nourishment: and the making of things inalimental to become ali-mental, may be an experiment of great profit.
Bacon.

Du'lhead. n. f. [dull and head.]

A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.

This people be fools and dulheads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief. Ascham.

Du'lia. n. f. [δελία.] An inferior kind of adoration.

Paleotus faith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the image; but with the different degrees of latria and dulia. Stillfleet.

DULL. adj. [dwl, Welsh; dole, Saxon;
dol, mad, Dutch.]

1. Stupid; doltish; blockish; unappre-hensive; indocile; slow of understanding.

Such is their evil hap to play upon dull spirited men. Hooker.

He that hath learned no wit by nature, nor art, may complain of gross-breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred. Shakspeare.

Sometimes this perception, in some kind of bodies, is far more subtle than the sense; so that the sense is but a dull thing in comparison of it.
Bacon's Natural History.

Every man, even the dullest, is thinking more than the most eloquent can teach him how to utter. Dryden.

2. Blunt; obtuse.

Meeting with Time, Slack thing, said I,
Thy scythe is dull; whet it, for shame. Herbert.

3. Unready; awkward.

Gynecia a great while stood still, with a kind of dull amazement, looking stedfastly upon her.
Sidney.

O help thou my weak wit, and sharpen my dull tongue. Fairy Queen.

Memory is so necessary to all conditions of life, that we are not to fear it should grow dull for want of exercise, if exercise would make it stronger. Locke.

4. Hebetated; not quick.

This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing. Matthew.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension; now that fear is sharpened and pointed.
Bacon.

5. Sad; melancholy.

6. Sluggish; heavy; slow of motion.

Thenceforth the waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunk thereof did faint and feeble grow. Spenser.

7. Gross; cloggy; vile.

She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling. Shakspeare.

8. Not exhilarating; not delightful: as, to make dictionaries is dull work.

9. Not bright: as, the mirror is dull, the fire is dull.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

10. Drowsy; sleepy.

To DULL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To stupify; to infatuate.

So was she dulled with all, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Sidney.

Those drugs she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile. Shaksp.

2. To blunt; to obtund.

Borrowing dulls the edge of industry. Shaksp.
This entrance of the battle did whet the courage of the Spaniards, though it dulled their swords. Bacon.

3. To sadden; to make melancholy.

4. To hebetate; to weaken.

Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
The troublous noise did dull their dainty ears.
Spenser.

Nothing hath more dulled the wits, or taken away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Ascham.

5. To damp; to clog.

Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

In bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression;
and even so is it of minds. Bacon.

6. To make heavy, or slow of motion.

Ufury dulls and damps all industries, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the slug. Bacon.

7. To fully brighten.

The breath dulls the mirror. Bacon.

Du'llard. n. f. [from dull.] A block-head; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.

What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakspeare.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shakspeare.

Du'llly. adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

The air if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gayly; not brightly; not keenly.

Not that I think those pantomimes,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art
Than those who dully act one part. Hudibras.

Du'lness. n. f. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; in-docility; slowness of apprehension.

Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish,
but rather to inflame, the charity of the teacher.
South.

Shadwel alone my perfect image bears,
Mature in dulness from his tender years. Dryden.

2. Want of quick perception.

Nature, by a continual use of any thing, groweth to a satiety and dulness either of appetite or working. Bacon.

3. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.

Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep. 'Tis a good dulness,
And give it way. Shakspeare's Tempest.

4. Sluggishness of motion.

5. Dimness; want of lustre.

6. Bluntness; want of edge.

Du'ly. adv. [from due.]

1. Properly; fitly; in the due manner.

Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his behest. Spenser.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.

Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB. adj. [דום, he was silent;
dumbs, Gothick; dumbe, Saxon; dum, Danish; dom, Dutch, dull.]

DUM

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them.

Hooker.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones, Star'd each on other. Shakspeare's Rich. III.

Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts' Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man.

Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show? Shakspeare.

His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton.

Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech.

Roscommon.

For he who covets gain in such excess
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours, and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryden.

DUMBLY. adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.

DUMBNESS. n. f. [from dumb.]

1. Incapacity to speak.

2. Omission of speech; muteness.

There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed.

Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

To th' dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakspeare.

3. Refusal to speak; silence.

'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize.

Dryden.

To DUMFOUND. v. a. [from dumb.] To confuse; to strike dumb. A low phrase.

They had like to have dumfounded the justice;
but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator.

DUMP. n. f. [from dom, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leafy. Shakspeare.

Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet concert; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. Shakspeare.

Funerals with stately pomp March slowly on in solemn dump. Hudibras.

The squire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay.

2. Absence of mind; reverie.

Locke
uses dumps singularly.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people,
when it carries them away from the company.

Locke.

DUMPIST. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu, his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumppish spight.

Spenser.

DUN

The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumppish, and four life; but chearful, lively, and pleasant. Herbert.

DUMPLING. n. f. [from dump, heaviness.]

A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.

DUN. adj. [Dun, Saxon.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!

And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell. Shakspeare.

He then survey'd

Hell and the gulph between, and Satan there Coasting the wall of heaven on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton's Par. Lost.

To DUN. v. a. [Dunan, Saxon, to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly:
they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.

When thou dunn'st their parents, seldom they,
Without a suit before the tribune, pay. Dryden.

I remember what she won:

And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

DUN. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Philips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve
by some rascally dun—Sir, remember my bill.

Arbuthnot's John Bull.

DUNCE. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, Dutch, stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thick-skull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best, in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stillingfleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [Dineg, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon.

I judge the likeliest way to be, the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won
From gross by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.

He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

To DUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds when the west wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon.

There, as his dream dun-told, a cart he found,
That carried compost forth to dung the ground.

Dryden.

DUO

DUNGEON. n. f. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse. Spenser.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd

This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton.

Now from the north

Of Norumbeque, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust and flaw. Milton.

By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addison.

DUNGFORK. n. f. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DUNGHIL. n. f. [dung and hill.]

1. A heap or accumulation of dung.

I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dung-hills are as much bound to him as I. Shakspeare.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dung-hill. L'Estrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dung-hill: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South.

The dung-hill having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurs'd,
Of which our earthly dung-hill is the worst. Dryden.

3. Any situation of meanness.

The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Ev'n from the dung-hill lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.

Out, dung-hill! dar'ft thou brave a nobleman?
Shakspeare.

DUNGHIL. adj. Sprung from the dung-hill; mean; low; base; vile; worthless.

His dung-hill thoughts, which do themselves enure

To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire. Spenser.

DUNGY. adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shakspeare.

DUNGYARD. n. f. [dung and yard.] The place of the dung-hill.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dung-yard. Mortimer.

DUNNER. n. f. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

They are ever talking of new silks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay. Spenser.

DUODECUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Latin.] Consisting of twelves.

Griseplus, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of scripture together. Arbuthnot.

DUPE. n. f. [dupe, French; from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name, Then dupe to party; child and man the same. Dunciad.

To DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit; Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit. Pope.

DU'PLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

To DUPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Lat.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undisturbed sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DUPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4. Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a dupli-ate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton's Opticks.

DUPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wiseman.

DUPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes. Ray on the Creation.

DUPLICITY. n. f. [duplilis, Lat.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at once. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Latin.]

The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Raleigh.

With pins of adamant, And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made, And durable! Milton.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied To motion, measures all things durable By present, past, and future. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.]

Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it. Addison.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from dure, law Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailer; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance and contagious prison; Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shak.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate, Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate; And yet men durance there abide, In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Huairbas.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round, And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound: Of how short durance was this new made state! How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison.

To DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh.

DUREFUL. adj. [from dure and full.]

Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried, Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire; But when it once doth burn, it doth divide Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n aspire. Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh.

DURESSE. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. In law.

A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure: as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. n. f. [dureté, French; durus, Lat.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown.

DURST. The preterit of dare.

The christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See Dusky.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

The hills, to their supply, Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist, Sent up again. Milton.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw, Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light, Enroll'd in dusky smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a dusky tincture than an absolute black. Wotton.

DUSKISHLY. adv. [from dusky.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snail, made the snail to burn dusky. Bacon.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Choak'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shak.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.

Through the plains, of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And fix succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shakespeare.
It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodw.
By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley.
Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [durtz, Saxon; duſt, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shaksp.
Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a foiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physick, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shaksp.
Thou

Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Samuel.

TO DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakespeare.
Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.

DUTCHESS. n. f. [duchesse, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakespeare.

The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DUTCHY. n. f. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Berne. Addison.

France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY-COURT. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DUTEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or regal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.

A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryd.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,

To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the founding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.

I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakespeare.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakespeare.

DUTIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiors; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DUTIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.
He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DUTIFULNESS. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Taylor.

DUTY. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke.

The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakespeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governors, or superiors; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shak.

God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater: it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone,
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him,
Used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus. Arbutnot.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.
See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.
Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbutnot.

DWARF. n. f. [dpeon, Saxon; dwerf, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made. Shakespeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.
They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room Throng numberless. Milton.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estr.
Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones difmounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needles spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition: as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honey-suckle.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakspeare.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shaksp.

This unheard fauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigny arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shak.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY. adv. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS. n. f. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glanville.

To DWAULE. v. a. [dwælian, Saxon, to wander; dwælen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL. v. n. preterit dwelt, or dwelled. [dualla, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have a habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus.

He shall dwelt alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Leviticus.

John Haywood and sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacham.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwelt no frowns, nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.
Abraham sojourned in the Land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb.

3. To be in any state or condition.
'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwelt in doubtful joy. Shak.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More busying his quick eyes-her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spens.
Th' attentive queen

Dwelt on his accents. Smith.
Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy. Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal:
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell. Dryden.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwelt upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwelt this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton.

DWE'LLER. n. f. [from dwelt.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

DWE'LLING. n. f. [from dwelt.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Qu.
Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jeremiah.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men, Delighted. Milton.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea, Sea without shore! Milton.

The living few and frequent funerals then Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryd.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field. Daniel.

DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. f. [from dwelt and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe.

DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. f. [from dwelt and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

To DWINDLE. v. n. [dwīnan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,

Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomf.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterb.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'nights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shaks.

We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot and three hundred horse left; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hemorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E A D

E Has two sounds; long, as scene, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cān, cāne; mǎn, mǎne; gāp, gāpe; glād, glāde; brēd, brēde; chīn, chīne; wīp, wīpe; thīn, thīne; nōd, nōde; tūn, tūne; plūm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as, gōne, knowledge, edge, give. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greete; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterward it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mēn, mēan; sēl, sēal; mēt, mēat; nēt, nēat.

EACH. pron. [elc, Saxon; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryd.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamant coat gird well, and each Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton.

Wife Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakspeare.
Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine. Addison's Cato.

EAD. [ad, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius, Eupolemus, Fausla, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gibb. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagon, Saxon; aigre, French.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryd.

Eager to read the rest, Acharis came. Dryden.
With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager, for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryd.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the founding brass of old to the labouring moon. Glanville.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Spratt.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, where he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd. Addis.

5. Sharp; four; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakspeare.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakspeare.

The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whoever died in that expedition was a martyr! South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

E A G

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were inclos'd. Shakspeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles' History of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS. n. f. [from eager.]

1. Keeness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shak.

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some falcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd. Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge if not warily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love. Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eage-ness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste. Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; caller, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey.

The eagle, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back.
Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.]

Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howel.

Ev'ry one is eagle-eyed to see Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.
EA'GLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.]
Swiftness like that of an eagle.
Abrupt, with eagle-speed she cut the sky, Instant invincible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder.
Calmet.

The eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three æaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth picking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GRE. n. f. [ager, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.

For as an eagle rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force. Dryden.

EA'LDERMAN. n. f. [ealderman, Saxon.]
The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [eam, Saxon; com, Dutch.] Uncle: a word still used in the wilder parts of Staffordshire.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly; behold thy dame
Foreshows the treason of thy wretched came! Fairfax.

EAR. n. f. [eare, Saxon; oor, Dutch.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd! Shakspeare.
His ears are open unto their cry. Psalms.
Vallalva discovered some passages into the region of the ear drum; of mighty use, among others, to make discharges of bruises. Derham.

2. That part of the ear that stands prominent.

You have heard of the news abroad: I mean,
the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear kissing arguments. Shakspeare.
His master shall bore his ear through with an
awl. Exodus.

3. Power of judging of harmony; the sense of hearing.

She has a delicate ear, and her voice is musick.
Richardson.

4. The head; or the person: in familiar language.

Their warlike force was sore weakened, the city beaten down about their ears, and most of them wounded. Knolles.

Better pass over an affront from one scoundrel, than draw the whole herd about a man's ears.
L'Estrange.

Be not alarmed, as if all religion was falling about our ears. Burnet's Theory.

5. The highest part of a man; the top.

A cavalier was up to the ears in love with a very fine lady. L'Estrange.

6. The privilege of being readily and kindly heard; favour.

Aristippus was earnest suitor to Dionysius for some grant, who would give no ear to his suit; Aristippus fell at his feet, and then Dionysius granted it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

They being told there was small hope of ease,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty. Ben Jonson.

If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own. Pope.

7. Disposition to like or dislike what is heard; judgment; opinion; taste.

He laid his sense closer, and in fewer words,
according to the style and ear of those times.
Denham.

8. Any prominences from a larger body, raised for the sake of holding it.

There are some vessels, which, if you offer to lift by the belly or bottom, you cannot stir them: but are soon removed, if you take them by the ears. Taylor's Holy Living.

A quilted night-cap with one ear. Congreve.
A pot without an ear. Swift.

9. The spike of corn; that part which contains the seeds.

He delivered to each of them a jewel, made in the figure of an ear of wheat, which they ever after wear. Bacon.

The leaves on trees not more,
Nor bearded ears in fields, nor sands upon the shore. Dryden.

From several grains he had eighty stalks, with very large ears full of large corn. Mortimer.

10. To be by the EARS.

To fight;
To fall together by the EARS. } to scuffle;
To go together by the EARS. } to quarrel.

[In Dutch oorlogen.] A familiar phrase.

Poor naked men belaboured one another with shagged sticks, or dully fell together by the ears at fifty-cuffs. More.

Fools go together by the ears, to have knaves run away with the stakes. L'Estrange.

All Asia now was by the ears,
And gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

11. To set by the EARS. To make strife; to make to quarrel: in low language.

A mean rascal sets others together by the ears without fighting himself. L'Estrange.

She used to carry tales from one to another,
'till she had set the neighbourhood together by the ears. Arbutnot.

It is usual to set these poor animals by the ears.
Addison.

EA'RLESS. adj. [from ear.] Without any ears.

Earless on high stood unabash'd Desoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below.
Pope.

EA'RRING. n. f. [ear and ring.] Jewels set in a ring and worn at the ears; ornament of a woman's ear.

With gold and silver they increase his store,
And gave the precious earrings which they wore.
Sandys.

A lady bestowed earrings upon a favourite lamprey. Arbutnot.

EA'RSHOT. n. f. Reach of the ear;
space within which words may be heard.

Gomez, stand you out of earshot.—I have something to say to your wife in private. Dryden.

EA'RWAX. n. f. [ear and wax.] The cerumen or exudation which smeares the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature loricated or plaistered over the sides of the hole with earwax, to entangle insects. Ray on the Creation.

EA'RWIG. n. f. [eare and pißga, a grub, Saxon.]

1. A sheath-winged insect; imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an earwig set;
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet. Drayton.

Earwigs and snails seldom infect timber.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

Doll never flies to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face,
Because she heard a sudden drum,
Or found an earwig in a plum. Swift.

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EA'RWITNESS. n. f. [ear and witness.]

One who attests, or can attest, any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made earwitnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment.
Hooker.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or earwitnesses, are built upon this principle. Watts.

TO EAR. v. a. [aro, Latin.] To plow;
to till. Obsolete.

He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop. Shakspeare.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates, Make the sea serve them, which they ear and wound

With keels of every kind. Shakspeare.

Deuteronomy.

Five years, in the which there shall be neither earing nor harvest. Genesis.

The field of love, with plough of virtue ear'd.
Fairfax.

TO EAR. v. n. [from ear.] To shoot into ears.

EA'RED. adj. [from ear.]

1. Having ears, or organs of hearing.

2. Having ears, or ripe corn.

The covert of the thrice ear'd field
Saw stately Ceres to her passion yield. Pope.

EARL. n. f. [eopl, Saxon; eoryl, Erse.]

A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
For such an honour nam'd. Shakspeare.

EARL-MARSHAL. n. f. [earl and marshal.]

He that has chief care of military solemnities.

The marching troops through Athens take their way;

The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

EA'RLDOM. n. f. [from earl.] The seigniory of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about redressing evils. Spenser on Ireland.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakspeare.

EA'RLINESS. n. f. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EA'RLY. adj. [æp, Sax. before.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation; in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me.

Shakspeare.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early and some come late. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking every cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring.

Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh soul of honour!

Oh early heroes! Smith.

EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betime.

Early before the morn, with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heav'n opened had.

Spenser.

None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.

The princess makes her issue like herself, by instilling early into their minds religion, virtue, and honour. Addison.

To EARN. v. a. [earnian, Saxon.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn.

Milton.

I to the evil turn

My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won.

Milton.

Men may discern

From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mafs of vanity could make me.

Shakspeare.

EARNEST. adj. [eonnert, Saxon.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance.

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

I told you Klaius was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they accounted play.

Sidney.

Therewith she laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest. Fairy Queen.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest.

Shakspeare.

Nor can I think that God, Creator wife!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy Us, his prime creatures. Milton.

But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion and power. L'Estrange.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Government of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Addison.

2. [ernitz penge, Danish; arres, French.] Pledge; handiel; first-fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.

The apostles term it the handiel or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.

It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Smalridge.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnest and pledges of greater. Atterbury.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.

You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death.

Shakspeare.

Pay back the earnest penny received from Satan, and fling away his sin. Decay of Piety.

EA'RNESTLY. adv. [from earnest.]

1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail.

Milton.

Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all-merciful and almighty God. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Shakspeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip her's; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

EA'RNESTNESS. n. f. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakspeare.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other mens spirits to such persons. Bacon's Natural History.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.

Addison's Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness, which had a slighter foundation to support it.

Atterbury.

3. Solitude; care; intenseness.

With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EA'RS. n. f. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade.

May's Virgil.

EARTH. n. f. [eort, Saxon.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.

Shakspeare.

This solid globe we live upon is called the earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas.

Hill's Mat. Medica.

Earths are opaque, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakspeare's King Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language. Genesis.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten set battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide.

Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it, bestow.

Tusser.

To EARTH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hide in earth.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tarriers in after him. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. To cover with earth.

Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auricula's which the frost may have uncovered.

Evelyn's Calendar.

To EARTH. v. n. To retire under ground.

Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhor'd the
day,

And hungry churls ensnar'd the nightly prey.

Ticket.

EA'RTHBOARD. n. f. [earth and board.]

The board of the plough that shakes off
the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow. Mortimer.

EA'RTHBORN. adj. [earth and born.]

1. Born of the earth; terrigenous.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;
Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise. Dryden.

The God for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earthborn race and measures right
To heav'n's great habitants! Prior.

2. Meanly born.

Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne. Smith.

EA'RTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.]

Fastened by the pressure of the earth.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earthbound root? Shakspeare.

EA'RTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About his shelves

Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds
Were thinly scattered. Shakspeare.

As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would fail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.
Arbutnot on Coins.

EA'RTHFLAX. n. f. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster, or parget; the finer, earthflax, or salamander's hair. Woodward.

EA'RTHINESS. n. f. The quality of containing earth; grossness.

EA'RTHLING. n. f. [from earth.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.

To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent. Drummond.

EA'RTHLY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,
Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death call'd life. Milton.

2. Belonging only to our present state;
not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakspeare.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven hight,
All were his earthly eyes both blunt and bad.
Spenser.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world: a female hyperbole

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old-age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?
Pope.

EA'RTHNUT. n. f. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.]
Tremour or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stopt, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake.
Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horror.
King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.
Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.]

Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethys grave majestic pace. Milton.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking
pow'r,

Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky.
Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. f. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon.

Upon a shower, after a draught, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean sordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'RTHY. adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!
Shakspeare.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthly vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthly matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; ter-rene.

To survey his dead and earthly image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater.
Shakspeare.

Him lord pronounc'd, he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend Their earthly charge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthly spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthly, the dark dungeon thine.
Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words deceit.
Shakspeare.

Nor is my flame

So earthly, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. f. [aïse, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold

To lead it to the wars and to the seas;

To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
Davies.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees.
Dryden's Æneas.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting.
Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain.
Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or con-ceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not
chance;

As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
Pope.

6. At Ease. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease,
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure.
Locke.

TO EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.
Shakspeare.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease.
Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbutnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?

And can our tears reverse his firm decrees?
Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load.

Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries.
No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it.

Isaiah.

Locke.

EA'SFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet;
peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easy western bed.

Shaksp.

EA'SEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from ex-pences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements.

Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like.

Cowell.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance;
but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped.

Bacon.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien
That made it easily foreseen

She fear'd too much to know.

Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can?

Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Ded. to State of Inno.
Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes.

Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd.

Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.

Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered.

Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half achiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd.

Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers.

Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.

Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy.

Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own.

South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves.

Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort;
not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest drefs.

Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep.

Ray.

EAST. n. f. [east, Saxon; beos, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the west.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward.

Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot.

Shakspere's Macbeth.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold.

Milton.

EA'STER. n. f. [eastre, Saxon; ooster, Dutch.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter?

Shakspere.

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism.

Decay of Piety.

EA'STERLING. n. f. [from east.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings.

Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from east.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the east.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthful.

Raleigh.

2. Lying toward the east.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England.

Graunt.

3. Looking toward the east.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition.

Arbuthnot.

EA'STERN. adj. [from east.]

1. Dwelling or found in the east; oriental.
Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep.

Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves.

Thomson.

2. Lying or being toward the east.

The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices.

Addison.

3. Going toward the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward.

Addison.

4. Looking toward the east.

Th' angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct.

Milton.

EA'STWARD. adv. [east and toward.]

Toward the east.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set.

Brown.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?

Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light.

Dryden.

EA'SY. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect.

Hooker.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try.

Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces.

Addison on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment.

Temple.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations.

Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy.

Addison's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances,
they are naturally enemies to innovations.

Addison's Freeholder.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter.

Addison's Spectator.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable.

Smalridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps Might yield them easier habitation.

Milton.

Pleasure has been the bus'ness of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself.

Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Baited with reasons not unpalatable,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares.

Milton.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts.

Dryden.

The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.

Addison's Cato.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive.

Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy.

Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

Those move easily that have learn'd to dance.

Pope.

Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join.

Pope.

To EAT. v. a. preterit ate, or eat;
part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Saxon; etan, Gothick; eich, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth.

Isaiah.

Other states cannot be accused for not slaying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Bacon's War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite,
because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou best of gold art worst of gold;
Others less fine in carat is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine-potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most re-nown'd,

Hast eat thy bearer up.

Shakspere's Henry IV.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it.

Tillotson.

Eating cares,
Lydian airs.

Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.

Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat.

Hakewill on Providence.

Credit were not to be lost

B' a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perfidiously, his word,
And swears his eats through a two inch board.

Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

4. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table.

2 Samuel.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners?

Matthew.

5. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not sit till he infallibly knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish.

Locke.

6. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want.

Proverbs.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;

Care no more to elude and eat.

Shakspeare. Cymb.

But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great.

Prior.

7. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials.

South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state.

Addison's Italy.

EATABLE. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EATABLE. n. f. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age.

King.

EATER. n. f. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribees and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh.

Abbot.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats.

Shakspeare.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast?

Brown.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other soils.

Horvel.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eath, Saxon.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where ease abounds, it's eath to do amiss.

Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind

Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe.

Fairfax.

The way was strait and eath.

Fairfax.

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,

From the right way full eath may wander wide.

Hubbard's Tale

EATINGHOUSE. n. f. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller slept into an eatinghouse for his dinner.

L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [eere, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes

With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd

To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us

To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,

As if his life lay on't.

Shakspeare.

His tears run down his beard, like winter drops

From eaves of reeds.

Shakspeare's Tempest.

If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter.

Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,

When the gust hath blown his fill,

Ending on the rustling leaves,

With minute drops from off the eaves.

Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.

Woodward

To EAVESDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.]

To catch what comes from the eaves;

in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EAVESDROPPER. n. f. [eaves and drop.]

A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,

To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

Shakspeare.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, epplob, Saxon; ebbe,

Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea:

opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass

Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,

As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink

From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole

With soft foot tow'ards the deep.

Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,

And shove the laden vessels into port:

Then with a gentle ebb retire again,

And render back their cargo to the main.

Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.

Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.

Raleigh's History.

Thus a'l the treasure of our flowing years,

Our ebb of life for ever takes away.

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus

Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining.

Dryden.

Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,

That I his hourly ebbs of life may see.

What is it he aspires to?

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.

Addison's Cato.

To EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood

Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,

Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea.

Shakspeare.

From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,

And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:

—I'll teach you how to flow.

—Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Shakspeare. Tempest.

But oh, he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!

For ever lovely stream, for ever stay!

Halifax.

E' BEN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard,

E' BON. } heavy, black, valuable wood,

E' BONY. } which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Moxon.

Of by the winds extinct the signal lies,

Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.

Gay:

EBRI'ETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drun-kennels; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

Brown's Vul. Err.

EBRILLADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. f. [ebriofitas, Latin.]

Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion.

Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a craffe and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown's Vul. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalitate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties.

Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal?

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water,

be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue.

Arbutnot.

ECCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus,

ECCE'NTRICK. } Latin.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

Thither his course he bends

Through the calm firmament; but up or down,

By centrick or eccentric, hard to tell.

Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,

To save appearances: they gird the sphere

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er,

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentric?

Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point;

not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master.

Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. King Charles.

A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.

Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal. Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news. Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

ECCHYMOSIS. n. f. [εκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wiseman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wiseman.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiastical.]

Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers. Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet's Theory.

ECCOPROTICKS. n. f. [εκ and κωπρωσις.]

Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick. Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINA'TE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]

ECHINA'TED. } Bristled like a hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedge-hog.
2. A shellfish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedge-hog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. f. [ἠχώ; echo, Latin.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo

In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes. Bacon's Natural History.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakspeare.

Wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth. Shakspeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!

With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song! Milton.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church echo'd. Shakspeare. Taming of Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her mitr'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice. Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note. Decay of Piety.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng. Dryden's Æneid.

One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.]

Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer. Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other. Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLICTICK. adj. [εκλεκτικος.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the eclictick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth. Watts on the Mind.

ECLE'GMA. n. f. [εξ and λεξιμα.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [εκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven: the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakspeare.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse

Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke.

2. Darknets; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses. King Ch.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Shakspeare.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune. Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—

—Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his. Denham's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford. Dryden.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh. Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engross'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

ECLIPTICK. n. f. [εκλειπτικος.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23° 30'. which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the ecliptick is that part among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward's Natural History.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which, passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLIP'TICK. adj. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day; The sun revolving through th' ecliptick way, Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. f. [ἐκλογία.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilus gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]

ECONOMICAL. } adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of a household. Her quick'ning power in every living part, Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve; And doth employ her economick art, And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal. Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swelled. Wotton's Architect.

ECO'NOMY. n. f. [οικονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, aconomy; but æ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence. Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

4. Disposition of things; regulation. All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hammond.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. Ben Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid, That by a constant separation made, They may a due economy maintain, Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

EC'PHRA'TICKS. n. f. [ἐκφράσις.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphratick medicines. Harvey.

E'CSTACY. n. f. [ἐκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly, And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to. Shaksp. Tempest.

'T may be No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling. Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy! Shakespeare.

The religious pleasure of a well-disposed mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting gives The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior. A pleasure which no language can express; An ecstasy, that mothers only feel, Plays round my heart. Philips' Distress Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;

Which when I did, he on the tender grass Would sit, and harken even to ecstasy. Milton.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air, Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems A modern ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Better be with the dead,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie In restless ecstasy. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason, Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh, That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth, Blasted with ecstasy. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

E'CSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

ECSTA'TICAL. } adj. [ἐκστατικός.]

ECSTA'TICK. } adj. [ἐκστατικός.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,

In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstasick fit. Milton.

When one of them, after an ecstasick manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillingfleet.

In trance ecstasick may thy pangs be drown'd; Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes; One grasps a Cecrops in ecstasick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstasick love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

E'CTYPE. n. f. [ἐκτύπημα.] A copy. The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

E'CURIE. n. f. [French; equus, Latin.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Latin.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. f. [edacitas, Latin.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence. Not in use.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer's Husbandry.

E'DDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake, Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make. Tusser.

E'DDY. n. f. [ed, backward, again, and ea, water, Saxon.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in, And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend, Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend, Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play, Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison's Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around, And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground. Dryden's Virgil.

EDEMATO'SE. adj. [οἰδηματώδης.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written oedematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

EDE'NTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth. Dict.

EDGE. n. f. [ecge, Saxon.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword

His wife, his babes. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,

Must forge thick, and grind thin. Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-theated knife,

No more shall cut his master. Shakespeare.

'Tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword. Shaksp.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plow it upon an edge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EDG

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton's Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law. Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches thoughts
refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Greech's Manil.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryden.

5. Keeness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again. Shakspeare's Richard III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune setteth the teeth on edge. Bacon.

To EDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin. Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded,
and the malicious edged. Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Watton's Life of the Duke of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE. v. n. [perhaps from ed, backward, Saxon.] To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so failing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden's Cleomenes.

EDGED. participial adj. [from edge.]

Sharp; not blunt.
We find that subtle or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

EDGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die. Shakspeare's Richard III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.

EDGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

EDI

There must be no playing with things sacred, no jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.

Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DGING. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.

A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison's Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

E'DIBLE. adj. [from edo, Latin.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bacon.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

E'DICT. n. s. [edictum, Latin.] A proclamation of command or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commanded his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings

Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's. Shaksp.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law? Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts, against gaming and fine cloaths. Addison.

EDIFICATION. n. s. [edificatio, Latin.]

1. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed for edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Taylor.

2. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification. Addison's Guardian.

E'DIFICE. n. s. [edificium, Latin.] A

fabrick; a building; a structure.
My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor

God built
So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd. Milton.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFIER. n. s. [from edify.] One that improves or instructs another.

To EDIFY. v. a. [edifico, Latin.]

1. To build.

EDU

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide. Spenser.

Men have edify'd

A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name. Chapman.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it becometh all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor. Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon's Holy War.

E'DILE. n. s. [edilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shakspeare.

EDITION. n. s. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Burnet.

2. Republication: generally with some revival or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakspeare.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

E'DITOR. n. s. [editor, Latin.] Publisher;

he that revises or prepares any work for publication.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor
does very well in taking notice of it. Addison.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope.

To E'DUCATE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct, and educate,
And make provision for the future state. Dryden's Virgil.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents: if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation. Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCATION. n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and error, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

To EDUCE. v. a. [educo, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glanv.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.

Th' eternal art educes good from ill, Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame. Mead.

EFFERVE'SCENCE. n. f. [from efferveo, Latin.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any collocation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodward's Natural History.

EFFETE. adj. [effetus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit, effete sensuality, with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICACIOUS. adj. [efficax, Latin.]

Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

A glowing drop with hollow'd steel
He takes, and, by one efficacious breath,
Dilates to cube or square. Philips.

EFFICACIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.]

Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way in which the striking body impels it. Digby on Bodies.

EFFICACY. n. f. [from efficax, Latin.]

Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons. Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms. Peacham.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God, have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers.

EFFICIENCY. } n. f. [from efficio, Latin.]
EFFICIENCY. } tin.] The act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident; but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of christianity upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed, will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concurrence of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward.

EFFICIENT. n. f. [efficio, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth meer natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale.

EFFICIENT. adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bacon.

2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.

A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood. Wifeman's Surgery.

EFFLORE'SCENT. adj. [effloresco, Latin.]

Shooting out in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone. Woodward.

EFFLU'ENCE. n. f. [effluo, Latin.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate. Milton.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the baches collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night. Prior.

EFFLU'VIA. } n. f. [from effluo, Latin.]

EFFLU'VIUM. } Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty of which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electric body, and the air but the effluvia thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth. Brown.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere, which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat? Blackmore.

EFFLUX. n. f. [effluxus, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey.

1. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of mens piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions. Hammond.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

Prime chearer, light!
Of all material beings, first and best!
Efflux divine! Thomson's Summer.

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLU'X. v. n. [effluo, Latin.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation. Bayle.

EFFLU'XION. n. f. [effluxum, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth. Brown.

2. That which flows out; effluvia; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body. Bacon.

To EFFO'RCE. v. a. [efforcer, French.]

1. To force; to break through by violence.

In all that room was nothing to be seen,
But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,
All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween

Them to efforce by violence or wrong. Fairy Q.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.

Then 'gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,
And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity. Spenser.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.

The palmer lent his ear into the noise,
To wheet who called to importunately;
Again he heard a more efforced voice,
That bade him come in haste. Spenser.

To EFFO'RM. v. a. [efformo, Latin.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image. Taylor.

EFF

EFFORMATION. n. f. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to. Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation. Marc.

They pretend to solve phenomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe. Ray.

EFFORT. n. f. [effort, French.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour. If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us. Addison.

Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays, Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze, We prize the stronger effort of his power, And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

EFFUSION. n. f. [effusio, Latin.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration. He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effusion of coins, and the procuring of mummies. Arbutnot.

EFFRAIABLE. adj. [effroyable, French.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used. Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effrayable nature but arsenical fumes. Harvey.

EFFRONTERY. n. f. [effronterie, French.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach. They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it. King Charles.

Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves. Watts.

A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself. Clarissa.

To EFFULGE. v. n. [effulgeo, Latin.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used. The topaz charms the sight, Like these effulging yellow streams of light. Savage.

EFFULGENCE. n. f. [effulgeo, Latin.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour. On thee effulgence of his glory abides. Milton.

Thy lustre, blest effulgence, can dispel The clouds of error, and the gloom of hell. Blackmore.

EFFULGENT. adj. [effulgens, Latin.] Shining; bright; luminous. How soon th' effulgent emanations fly Through the blue gulph of interposing sky! Blackmore.

The downward sun Looks out effulgent, from amid' the flash Of broken clouds. Thomson's Spring.

EFFUMABILITY. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word, but not adopted. They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability. Boyle.

To EFFUSE. v. a. [effusus, Lat.] To pour out; to spill; to shed. He fell, and, deadly pale, Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd. Milton.

At last emerging from his nostrils wide, And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide. Pope's Odyssey.

EFT

EFFUSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion. Not used. The air hath got into my deadly wounds, And much effuse of blood doth make me faint. Shakspeare.

EFFUSION. n. f. [effusio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring out. My heart hath melted at a lady's tears, Being an ordinary inundation; But this effusion of such manly drops, This show'r, blown up by tempest of the soul, Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd. Shakspeare.
- Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
- If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open. Burnet's Theory.
2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding. When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hooker.
- Stop effusion of our christian blood, And 'stablish quietness. Shakspeare Henry vi.
- Yet shall she be restor'd, since publick good For private int'rest ought not be withstood, To save th' effusion of my people's blood. Dryden.
3. The act of pouring out words. Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hooker.
4. Bounteous donation. Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon mens souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had. Hammond.
5. The thing poured out. Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. King Charles.

EFFUSIVE. adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing. The north-east spends its rage; th' effusive south Warms the wide air. Thomson's Spring.

EFT. n. f. [efeta, Saxon.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water. Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efts, upon which they will live. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The crocodile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country. Nicholas.

EFT. adv. [eft, Saxon.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly. Obsolete. Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush, With noise whereof he from his lofty steed Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush, To hide his coward head from dying dread. Fairy Queen.

Quite consumed with flame, The idol is of that eternal maid; For so at least I have preserv'd the same, With hands profane, from being eft betray'd. Fairfax.

EFTSOONS. adv. [eft and poon.] Soon afterward; in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning. He in their stead eftsoons, placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill, Run all in haste to see that silver brood. Spenser.

EGO

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars should eftsoons ensue. Knolles' History.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay, And all the year shall then be holiday. Gay.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

EGER. n. f. [See EAGRE] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide. From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To EGEST. v. a. [egero, Latin.] To throw out food at the natural vents. Divers creatures sleep all the winter; as the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. Bacon's Natural History.

EGESTION. n. f. [egestus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents. The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions, as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation. Hales' Origin of Mankind.

EGG. n. f. [æg, Saxon; ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered and some other animals, from which their young is produced. An egg was found having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.
- Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of animal food, and most indigestible. Arbutnot.
2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures. Therefore think him as the serpent's egg, Which hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Shakspeare
- Ev'ry insect of each different kind, In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays, Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmore.
3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg. There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chemists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To EGG. v. a. [eggia, to incite, Islandick; eggian, Sax.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes ignorantly used. Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham's Physics-Theology.

EGGLANTINE. n. f. [eglantier, French.] A species of rose; sweetbriar. O'er-canopied with luscious woodbine, With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine. Shakspeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander, Out-sweeten'd not thy breath. Shakspeare.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread, A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

EGOTISM. n. f. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego or I; too frequent mention of a man's self in writing or conversation. The most violent egotism, which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of Cardinal Wolsey's; ego & rex meus; I and my king. Spectator.

E'GOTIST. n. f. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGREGIOUS. adj. [egregius, Latin.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits both of art and valour. Mohre.

One to empire born;
Egregious prince; whose manly childhood
shew'd

His mingled parents, and portended joy Unpeakable. Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vitious.

This is the usual sense.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker.

Ah me, most credulous fool!

Egregious murderer! Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

And hence th' egregious wizzard shall fore-doom

The fate of Louis and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGREGIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.]

Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an ass

And practising upon his peace and quiet,

Even to madness. Shakspeare's Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

E'GRESS. n. f. [egressus, Latin.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Gates of burning adamant,

Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous. Woodward's Natural History.

EGRESSION. n. f. [egressio, Latin.] The act of going out.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Pope.

E'GRET. n. f. A fowl of the heron kind,

with red legs. Bailey.

E'GRIOT. n. f. [aigret, French; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour. Bacon.

To EJA'ULATE. v. a. [ejaculator, Latin.]

To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew.

The mighty magnet from the center darts

This strong, though subtle force, through all the parts:

Its active rays, ejaculated thence,

Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULA' N. n. f. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.

Bacon's Essays.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

EJA'ULATORY. adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa's Devotion.

2. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

To EJE'CT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning fallies from his throat!

Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force

Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can. Milton.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch

This viperous traitor; to eject him hence

Were but our danger; and to keep him here,

Our certain death; therefore it is decreed

He dies to-night. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it even so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended.

Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTION. n. f. [ejectio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

EJE'CTMENT. n. f. [from eject.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT. adj. [eaptra, Saxon; abta, Go-thick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four.

A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eight appears! Shakspeare.

In the eight month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;

The eight she voluntarily moves to part,

Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart.

Pope.

EI'GHTEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,

And leave eighteen. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam died Abijam.

1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY. adv. [from eight.] In the eight place.

Eightly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth;

eight tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain.

Wilkins' Math. Magic.

EI'GHTSCORE. adv. [eight and score.]

Eight times twenty; a hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eightscore eight hours? and lovers absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eightscore times?

Oh weary reckoning! Shakspeare's Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Shakspeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aïsne, Fr.] In law, it denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh

after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. f. [eoril, Saxon.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind

How thou resemblest Christ, as with sower poison,

If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall,

How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.

Sir T. Moore.

EI'THER. pron. [æððer, Saxon; auther, Scottish.]

1. Whichsoever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,

Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,

Nor either cares for him. Shakspeare.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymph.
Goring made a fast friendship with Digby,
either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

EITHER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or: either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULATION. n. f. [ejulatio, Lat.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's both power and eke will. Fairy Queen.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

TO EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart sore. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.
—And mine to eke out her's. Shakspeare.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakspeare.

Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shakspeare.

4. To spin out by useless additions. In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.

TO ELA'BORATE. v. a. [elaboro, Lat.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Latin.]

Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament of outward shew
Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.]

Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORA'TION. n. f. [from elaborate.]

Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition. Ray.

TO ELA'NCE. v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people Joyfully repeated lô! Prior.

Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly Irrevocable. Prior.

TO ELA'PSE. v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docile season, a learning time in youth, which suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL. } adj. [from ἑλκεῖν.] Hav-

ELA'STICK. } ing the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastic engines did she rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pressure, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton's Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastic and strong. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastic power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastic.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
